

28 MAY 05. Greetings! I just finished reading Tom Chittum's outstanding book, "Civil War Two", which I had thought was the basis of a movie by that title. Mr. Chittum's book is far more informative & instructive, however. As a long-time student of International Relations, I see things in the same light as he does. I congratulate him on his temperate handling of explosive topics, which is a useful approach to uninformed & uncommitted readers who are in most need of the knowledge which Mr. Chittum conveys. I think he has covered all the bases in regard to likely scenarios, as well as describing existing trends on this continent in regard to demographics, politics & economics.

China appears to be looming larger in terms of its rapid expansion into the Western Hemisphere, including Canada, whose second language is now Mandarin, according to their latest census. As Mr. Chittum mentioned Japan's interest in North America as an agricultural supply base, it would appear that he is aware of the likelihood that North American conflicts will not occur in isolation, but are likely to attract a Chinese &/or Japanese, even a Korean presence, in the event of an imperial collapse within the U.S.A. Truly, we are not alone!

If men were wise (ho, ho!) some peaceful division of territory might take place among the competing ethnic groups, but as Mr. Chittum points out, such a peaceful solution can not occur, so long as the "New World Order" globalists wish to continue expanding their bubble of imperialism within North America, as well as the rest of the world. The very success of the globalist-imperialists' policies will cause their bubble to pop in due course. The more successful they are, the sooner that will happen.

When viewed from a great power standpoint, the world resembles a chessboard, with men as pawns who are expendable, as a matter of tactics. It seems to me that the hungry powers of Asia would not like to see their American breadbasket go up in the flames of a civil war, as Mr. Chittum describes. Perhaps the Asians could ally themselves with the ethnic group of their choice: one which would assist them in the production of agricultural surpluses, say. I do not think the Chinese would see it in their interests to allow the destruction & overpopulation of their American plantation, nor would they welcome a massive disruption of the infrastructure which serves them. As Mr. Chittum wrote, such foreign occupation may take place under the guise of U.N. "peace-keeping". China certainly has the manpower to occupy this continent with their military, just as they are beginning to do with their civilians. As we see, military aspects of war are unnecessary if one can achieve his objectives peacefully, as the Hispanics & Chinese are presently doing.

We both agree that we are living in "interesting times", as the Chinese curse goes, but in crisis there is opportunity as well as danger. That is why I proclaim ORION! (OUR RACE IS OUR NATION!). All the best.
