

11-11-05. Hail Johnathan! I was waiting to receive word from you before I replied to your outstanding letter of 1 MAY 05, for I thought you'd be getting settled in Porterville, CA. I'm sorry to read that you are again a 'guest' of the ZOG, thanks largely to their own incompetence, tinged, I suspect with malice on their part. It does seem like a revolving-door. Not to be paranoid, but it seems strange that a cop would pull you over on the way to your sister's wedding. He must have had a quota on traffic stops, as many do, or maybe he was bored. Maybe it's just bad luck.

Thanks for informing me about the mysterious ways of the ZOG-gulags. I have never had the opportunity to be paroled, but it seems like a bad error on the ZOG's part to parole you to a county which would not accept you for parole! ZOG's communications must be in very poor condition, if their own system requires notification, but appears not to notify those concerned. That's where our tax dollars go! When your parole is renewed, it would be wise to check up on the ZOG to find out where you are permitted to go, & if the local ZOG says you can enter their turf. It sounds as if you were set up, by ZOG, but I don't wish to seem paranoid. Of course, "paranoia" or undue worry about the ZOG may not be "undue" at all. ZOG only knows! I sure hope your situation improves, as it should.

Re your letter of 1 May: You raised so many important & interesting points about the connections between psychology, psychiatry & anthropology that a whole series of relevant lectures could be arranged. Yes, jews tend to focus on word-games, rather than reality. If I am hungry, for instance, a kosher psycho-quack would say that the problem is not in my empty stomach, but in my mind. Well, my stomach has told my mind that it wants food, not sheeny bafflegab & b.s.. Jesus allegedly stated that it would be unsuitable to offer a man who wants bread a stone instead. Well, words are also a poor substitute for food! I recall a Goy (Gentile) who wrote to the jewess, "Ann Landers", expressing his worries about the future of the world. She dismissed his angst as being a personal projection of his own problems! How typical, but if he were a hebe, she would have likely commiserated with him in regard to his 'idealism' & his concern for problems beyond his immediate ones, like a 'true-jew'. Koshers psycho-quackery is pernicious, for it tends to exaggerate psychological problems, rather than put them into perspective. It is a truism, derived from experience, that a beginner at horseback riding, bicycle-riding, &c. who has a fall, should get back on & ride as soon as possible. If the beginner dwells upon the experience instead, he may never ride again. This is how "crisis-counselling" can be counter-productive. Crises occur, & can be evaluated as learning experiences, but life has too many aspects for one to dwell on a particular crisis, to the point of becoming dysfunctional. The mind tends to develop associations, as Pavlov confirmed. It is therefore desirable that negative associations should be minimized in regard to desirable behavior, such as riding, acting, public speaking, &c. One can be taught to stutter, for example, just as one can be untaught, but why learn to stutter in the first place? Freud apparently wanted money & love, in the form of recognition: "Love me, love my perversions!" By accepting Freud's perverse ideas, his patients, that is, dupes, showed their 'love' for this jew-pervert & rewarded him with what jews love most: money! Such a deal! Freud called this masochistic love for him & his ideas "transference", which was apt, for it included his victims' transference of their money to his pocket. C.J. Jung, a student of Freud, concluded that there was no place for jewish psychology in the Aryan mind. As a student of anthropology, I would agree with Jung. Mark Twain wrote that the number of jews in America was much greater than the number reported, based on the behavior of so many people after the U.S. Civil War. Henry Ford opined that the number of jews in business had not increased so much as the number of businessmen who behaved like jews! I saw a cat which had been raised with chickens, so it accompanied the flock & actually scratched the ground & pecked, like its companions! I wondered what satisfaction the cat derived from mimicking chicken behavior, & the cat wondered, apparently, for it would perform a chicken procedure & look around, as if it were trying to understand what satisfaction its avian associates derived from pecking & scratching the ground! There have been various accounts written about men who were raised as women & vice versa, but who nevertheless behaved as Nature had intended for them to do. In the debate between Nature & Nurture, heredity & environment, some argue that the debate is inappropriate, for the two do not oppose, but interact with one another, just as male interacts with female, rather than as two opposing species. Environmental factors do not seem to make one more intelligent, but they can cripple one's intelligence, just as jews like to do to their Goy victims, who include those who watch lots of TV & other jewsmedia of information, education & entertainment.

2) In regard to the poor & homeless people, who are increasing in the USA: the causes for their plight are many, but they seem to have one thing in common: maladaptive behavior, as you mentioned. Drugs & alcohol have been blamed for poverty, but I think that a really poor person cannot afford drugs & alcohol, so he must have had sufficient money to start his destructive addictions in the first place. With poverty, it takes two to tango: A person can become poor, regardless of environmental circumstances, but due to his own bad decisions. The ongoing changes in our working environment, the U.S. economy, &c. are definitely creating conditions in which people will need to be very smart &/or lucky to avoid poverty, which will be like staying dry on The Titanic, after it sinks. As you suggest, one's poverty may result from pre-existing mental conditions, or his mental condition may be due to his poverty! I have known people who define themselves as bums, regardless of the money they have. One fellow who was otherwise sober & hard-working would earn enough money to save a good portion thereof, which he'd put into the bank. Then, right on schedule, he'd go on a binge, thereby losing all his savings & even the furniture in his apartment. Most of the money went to pay bootleggers, rather than pay for the booze itself, so it turned out that he received more satisfaction from his poverty, rather than the booze! Once he'd renewed his 'bum' status, he'd sober up, & begin the cycle again. I worked with the fellow for several years, & we discussed his attitude toward himself. I told him that I lived most of my life as a bum, for a student is really a bum who has books, but I never considered myself a bum, whereas he thought of himself as a bum. Despite the fact that he'd seen more money than I ever would pass through his sodden fingers, his self-definition was that he was a bum, for whom success was improper, as well as prosperity! The mind is a wondrous thing, indeed. The "Iceman Cometh" by Eugene O'Neill (sp?) relates to this topic of dysfunctional behavior & attitudes which conspire within the individual to defeat him by denying his stated goals. If Freud pointed out anything worthwhile, it was that people may say they want something when they really want the opposite or something quite different! In most cases, however, people usually want what they say they want. The book by a Jew, if I recall, entitled "Games People Play" addresses this topic. Yes, people can play tricks on themselves, just as they play tricks on others. Another word for trickery is politics.

In regard to the Jew-book alias Bible, we are now in the "Christmakkah season". The Feast of Lights for the mythical relighting of the lamps in the Jews' temple occurs around the Hindu Feast of Lights, so go figure! It also appears that many statements attributed to Jesus were stolen from previous statements in Buddhist texts, some of them word for word, so Jesus is not so much a savior as he is a plagiarist. This is why we call it "the season to be jolly", even if the joke is on us. Hebrew is said to omit vowels. This leads to many possible variations in translation. As I understand, the Hebrew spelling for "Jesus" is the same as for "Joshua", which may be the reason for confusion in regard to the alleged deeds of one or the other in Hebrew mythology. Since Judas & Jesus are common Jew names, it is easy for people to confuse one Judas with another, not to mention a Jesus with a Joshua. Dr. Oliver had a great knowledge of classical languages, including Sanskrit, Greek, Latin & Hebrew. He wrote that "Elohim" is plural, so the correct biblical translation is not "god", but "gods". The Roman legend of virgin-birth was 'retro-translated' for the Christians, but in the original Hebrew, the word does not mean "virgin" at all, but "young woman". Once Roman emperors were entitled to god-status, they were also said to be "born of virgins". "Christ" is a title, not a family name. It means "Jew-king." Cyrus of Babylon (Koresh in Hebrew) was ELECTED Christ by the Jews of Babylon, because of all the favors he'd done for the hebes, who betrayed Babylon at their first opportunity, to its invaders, just as the hebes appear to be betraying the USA to China in the present. As Disraeli said, "Those who do not understand race can never understand history." And, "if it comes from a Jew, it must be true."

In "The Riddle of the Jews' Success", the author, whose name I forget, says that the Jews are not very clever, but they are taught lots of old scams by their elders. They fool the Goyim, because the parents of the Goyim are fools not to teach their children about the Jews & their scams. Rattlesnakes often bite those who don't know about rattlesnakes, so ignorance can have the same result as stupidity. Being 'Jew-wise' is like donning those special sunglasses in the revealing movie, "They Live!"

All the best & ORION!
