

27 MAR 06. Hail Joshua! Many thanks for your great letter of 16 MAR 06 & your essay of DEC 05. Thanks for the newspaper clipping about David Irving's thought-crime trial in Zionist-Occupied Austria. He reneged on his previous "gas chamber" denial, so he claims that the Germans "gassed" jews & others in "death camps." His peculiar lack of consistency as a historian does not flatter him, nor did it get him off with a reduced sentence, so he will be in the ZOG-gulag for 3 years. Congratulations on your excellent essay on the importance of history. I have said virtually what Adolf Hitler stated in "Mein Kampf" about WHY we should learn history, without realizing that Hitler had said it before me. I pointed out that we needed to know the status of The Lusitania BEFORE our Zionist masters used it as a lever to get us into World War I, even though it was allegedly the sinking of The Sussex which served as the final pretext to get the U.S. Congress to declare war in 1917, if I recall correctly. The Lusitania was purposely set up for sinking in 1916, but it was already a matter of public record that the ship was registered at Lloyds of London as "an auxiliary cruiser" in time of war, which was apparently outfitted with 5" guns. One wonders what would have happened if many U.S. people had known that The Lusitania was, in fact, a warship & that The Sussex was not sunk, but riding safely at anchor in a British port! Now, we have the Internet to broadcast current news. It took me almost 50 years to discover what happened before the attack on Pearl Harbor, due to the limited access I had to archives. In 1941, the control of the newsmedia was much tighter than it is today, with the Internet looking over their shoulders. Lies are unmasked as such much sooner than they ever were. Thanks for the quotes about history from Adolf Hitler & Ortega y Gasset. Historian George Santayana said that those who do not learn history are doomed to repeat it, & he was not referring to a college course! Benjamin Disraeli said that "those who do not understand race will never understand history."

You have discovered a fact which took me a few years to discover in my studies: Yes, authors do have their agendas & their connections with certain group agendas, usually those who pay them to write their versions of history & even scientific research findings. I like to know where a writer is coming from. I listen to a jew-commie radio station, so I know how to screen their 'news' items for their kosher-commie content & slant. Part of a message is who's saying it, for we may derive a reason why he says it. I write from a pro-White standpoint, even when my material is critical of Whites. That does not mean that I lie about non-Whites, for by doing so, I'd be doing Whites a disservice. You, Commander Rockwell & I agree about the propaganda content of fiction. Fiction is a good medium in which to make a message palatable to the reader &/or viewer. The normal consumer of fiction thinks he is being entertained, when he is really being indoctrinated by propaganda. Orwell's 'fictional' tyranny of "1984" is becoming more descriptive of our ZOG's crude propaganda for the mass audience. We even have our eternal enemy figure: Osama bin Laden, who may be trotted out whenever convenient for our bankster-gangsters in The District of Corruption. The problem with mass-education or mass-anything is that fewer than one out of 20 have any leadership potential, as derived from Chinese experiments on U.S. P.O.W.s during the Korean War. When the 1 was taken out of the 20, the 19 behaved as sheep without a shepherd or even a watchdog. "Sheeple" who are the majority, lack critical faculties, a sense of humor, initiative, & tend toward "situational ethics," by "going along to get along," no matter what. If they are among cannibals, they will eat what the cannibals eat. If they are in a consumer society, they will be consumers in a monkey-see-monkey-do fashion. I am not annoyed by this knowledge, but I take it into account, as the Chinese captors of the American sheeple did. My source for this 1 out of 20 ratio is the official U.S. P.O.W. tapes which I heard when I was in Air Force ROTC in college, back in the mid-1950s. ZOG knows that I have some leadership potential, for I tend to take charge of things, if no one else is around to do it, because someone must take charge. In my apartment building, the fire alarm sounded recently. I noticed that it did not cease, as is usual when some bumbling resident trips it by mistake. Then the building manager shuts it off at the main switchboard. I looked out amid the clangor. No one was out to investigate, although everyone was at home in their apartments. I saw smoke accumulating at the far end of the corridor, so I strode down to the apartments which seemed to be the source of the smoke, & I banged on the doors. One apartment dweller did not respond, but the one who did said he'd just had a fire in his microwave oven, but it was out. The smoke was entering the corridor from his apartment. That was all I needed to know, so I went down to the main floor where the building manager was still attempting to switch off the fire alarm. I calmly told her that it could not be turned off because of the smoke in the corridor, which caused the smoke detectors to trigger the alarm. Soon, the firemen arrived. No one knew what was going

2) on, aside from myself. The firemen had responded to the alarm, so I told them that there was no fire, just smoke, & that I'd show them the source of the smoke. They followed me, saw the apartment where the smoke had come from, spoke with the resident & brought in an extractor fan to clear the smoke from the corridor, thus stopping the alarm racket. By then, some of the resident bipeds were actually bestirring themselves, because firemen had arrived. No fire would have prompted them to evacuate the premises, & the firemen complained: "Why isn't everyone outside?" I said that I did not know. It made no sense to me. Okay, so I've been a firefighter. That's why I respond to a fire alarm, for I don't like fire & smoke. The denizens of my building may not know what fire & smoke are really like, except for what they see on TV, but ignorance does not justify such zombie behavior, such inertia & such apathy on their parts. Perhaps they had taken medication to help them sleep. I don't know, but if we had had a real fire, I wouldn't bet that many would have made it out of the building. If the fire had been going, not just the smoke, I would have banged on all the doors & kicked some of them down, to roust the dozy denizens from their potentially fatal inertia. I've had some experience dealing with natural emergencies, such as fires, & human emergencies such as train wrecks, of which I've been in 3. I've been called upon to deal with potential emergencies during storms at sea, which, fortunately, did not occur, although we'd have been prepared to weather the worst. So, maybe my behavior is different because my background of experience is different. Oh, I've been bombed, my residence that is, 3 times; twice in Colombia & once in Canada, plus I've been missed by one landmine & two possible snipers. Maybe I'm accustomed to situations which many people have not encountered, but smoke in an apartment building is pretty routine, & the steps one should take seem pretty obvious, but not so for my neighbors! I am no rocket scientist, but I do have a basic knowledge of combustion & its by-products, just from normal living on Planet Earth. Contact with flames & smoke inhalation are not good for featherless bipeds, including myself, so if my neighbors are not ignorant, why are they so apathetic? I see the same inertia in this worsening political, economic & demographic situation, here on the USS Titanic. My attitude is that of a German WWII vet: "Don't fret, just wonder!" Of course, if no one else wants to participate in their own salvation, I will try, at least, to save myself, as I did when I left Rhodesia, before the Black takeover, with assistance from their ZOG, which deported me for pro-White activities. Most of my fellow Whites remained, & several were murdered by the Black bandits, who wanted their lands. I had warned them about the consequences of Smith's sellout to Black Marxist Misrule, but the Whites had to be educated with the sharp sides of machetes. Unfortunately, their first lesson was also their last. I have seen serious injuries & violent deaths at firsthand. I think the first violent death occurred when a schoolmate was killed in a chemistry lab explosion when I was a junior in high school. He staggered out of the smoke-filled lab, collapsed & bled to death before the firetrucks & ambulance arrived. I helped a janitor cover him with a girl's coat. Other classmates were badly injured or died in normal car-crashes. In Colombia, I saw lots of dead bodies beside trails, roads & on sidewalks in cities. You can appreciate what it was like in Colombia: the second week I was there, bandits beheaded 52 people on the highway to Bogota. They set up a roadblock & were disguised as soldiers, so their victims put up no resistance when they were escorted behind a hut & got their heads whacked off with machetes. The first year I was there, my Cali residence was bombed twice. Fortunately, I happened to be out, both times, but one fellow was inside when the second bomb went off, so he was concussed & rather incoherent when we arrived to inspect the premises. Part of my job was to check any mysterious packages on the premises. If no one claimed ownership, we were to evacuate the building immediately. Only by oversleeping one hour did my comrades & I avoid being blown up by a landmine on the main road from Armenia to Ibague, Colombia. That's how I survived President Kennedy, who was assassinated later that year: November 1963, which I heard about on the radio in Cali, Colombia. That's how I avoided the judeo-American ratrace in California, which was really getting me down. Having seen sudden death, before, during & after, you can understand why I take emergencies seriously. It can happen to you & to me.

I congratulate you for analyzing the jews' clever use of "good cop/bad cop" tactics, as they do with the Democrats & Republicans here. The sheeple are tossed from one hand of ZOG to the other, as if they will achieve any relief from the banksters' oppression! As the old song goes: "When will they ever learn?" Such tactics are not new, but they never seem to fail, as long as Goyim are taught to be so dumb. 19 out of 20 are indeed 'sheeple,' so we should not be surprised at their behavior. My recollections of history are based on music methodology: theme & variations. Learn the main themes & their variations, & the notes fall

3) into place. No, I do not try to remember all names & dates, either, just so as I can look them up. As you observe, there are different versions of history, any one of which may be misleading, depending on the purpose of the author.

Thanks for your interesting summary of the post-World War II Communist leaders of Romania. Ceausescu reminded me of Tito in the former Yugoslavia: rather independent of Moscow. I did not know that Romania had trade relations with China. During that period, Albania was practically a Chinese province, as I understood. How embarrassing that must have been for Moscow!

My German instructors told us that grammar was not how we learned language, for we already knew how to speak English before we ever heard of grammar, parts of speech, &c. Their method of language instruction emphasized the spoken word, speech patterns, so that one would begin to know what was correct without a grammatical explanation. We also learned in context by situational conversations, for which we memorized dialogs every day & used them in class for 6 hours per day, with different teachers, so we would not acquire an individual's accent. Since German is phonetic, we could read it correctly within one hour of instruction, even if we could not understand the meanings of the words we spoke! Our teachers merely taught us the rules of pronunciation. We had lots of fun with Umlauts & in distinguishing "ie" from "ei." Initially, we got it wrong, as with, "Halt oder ich scheisse!" (Stop, or I'll shit!), as opposed to "Halt oder ich schiesse (shoot)." It was a six month course. Our daily grind was six hours of class & another 3 hours of memorizing dialogs for the next day. If one were good at memorization, that time might be reduced to 7 or 8 hours, but for me, it was usually 9. By the second week we mentioned that we were dreaming in German. It served me in good stead, although it did not prevent Markus Wolf, the East German Stasi sheenie, from kicking me out of Berlin, where I wanted to see Dr. Joswig, whom I'd met in California. He was head of the DDR Economic Institute. One East German complained to me that they wanted to learn English, instead of Russian, because the scientific publications originated in English, were copied into Russian, & the East Germans had to translate them into German, so they were getting old scientific news. Learning songs is a great way of learning vocabulary & grammar, as we did with our spoken dialogs. It is much easier to learn by word-association, than it is to learn random lists of words. Also, each noun or thing must be learned with its gender, whether it is der, die or das, for all the rest of a sentence relates to the gender of the noun. Then there are the cases: das Kino is the cinema or movie theater. If you are walking to the cinema, you say: "Ich gehe ins Kino." "ins" means "in das." But if you are phoning from the theater lobby, you say: "Ich bin im Kino." (I'm in the movie theater.) "im = in dem (in the, for a neuter noun). German has transitives showing motion, as does English, which we rarely encounter: thence, whence, whither, thither. "There" would be considered stationary, as "where" would be. Thus, it would formerly be incorrect to say, "Where are you going?" One would properly ask, "Whither are you going?" or in the familiar: "Whither goest thou?" German still has these usages, but not English, I'm happy to say!

Teaching one's language to a conquered people, or learning the language of the conquered is not a question for me. As an old colonial, I much prefer that the natives learn my language & my customs so I feel comfortable. If I am the conqueror, why must I change my language & culture to suit them? The Vikings who adopted French seem to have assimilated in terms of language & the feudal Christian culture, which was quite undemocratic, as compared to the culture & customs of the Vikings. The Norsemen (later Normans) succumbed to greed for land & power. That's the major motive for their abandonment of their Norse language & culture. It is good to learn a language by reading good literature, that is, well-written literature, & by speaking with well-spoken people. In Mexico, I roomed in the home of a middleclass Mexican family, so my Spanish was correct. One fellow thought he'd ace his German test because he roomed with a German family & he spoke German every day. He flunked the test, because his teachers spoke a German dialect & not High German! Peoples do tend to alter their languages to facilitate trade. That's how English developed, as a compromise between German & Scandinavian (Danish, Swedish & Norwegian, NOT Finnish, which is not an Indo-European language). The Lingua Franca of the Mediterranean consists of Latin, Greek, Arabic & possibly Turkish, for trade purposes. In Africa, Swahili is a trade language, north of the Zambesi River, & Chalapalapa or Kitchen Kaffir is the trade language south of the Zambesi, in my experience. Swahili has many African & Arabic words, & Kitchen Kaffir has Dutch, English & African words. "Hapana bassa" means "no work." "Cabora bassa" means "work is finished." "Cabora" may be derived from Portuguese, meaning "finished." "Hamba lapa side" means "go to the other side."

4) A student of "High Dutch" told me that Afrikaans is basically "Amsterdam sailor talk." He claims that all sorts of shipboard words are used, such as "galley" for "kitchen," even in houses. At least, that's what he says.

Your essay, "Seek a Fuller Understanding," is worthy of publication, so I'll send a photocopy to "Fidelitas", in hopes they will find space for it. Many thanks! Rather than attempt to cover all bases with a book about National Socialism, for example, I prefer to answer a correspondent's questions with a letter & relevant material. I remember one publisher who never replied to letters. Instead of answering the writer's question (s) with a letter typed on a single page, he'd send the writer a box full of miscellaneous material, which some recipients complained about! As my professors used to say before exams: "Don't regurgitate everything you know. Just answer the question!"

I've seen 3 different ways of spelling "Romania", which is the spelling preferred by my Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary. It also lists "Roumania" & "Rumania." I prefer Romania, since I understand that it was first settled by Roman legionaries. If we break the word down, it seems to mean that a type of insanity affects Romans, similar to the Spanish Flu: a Roman mania! When I was in Canada, we had "Trudeaumania," a media-generated craze for Pierre Trudeau, who frequently displayed his Trudeau Salute: raising the middle finger, which was interpreted to mean, "I am Number One!" The sheeple loved it. Trudeau was way beyond Marie Antoinette, who allegedly said about the starving poor: "Let them eat cake." Trudeau told some protestors: "Mange la merde!" (Eat shit!) This dietary difference sufficed to cost Marie her beautiful head, while Pierre kept his ugly one, which proves that Canadians are masochists.

I'll look around for a copy of The Declaration of Independence, but I do have a copy of the U.S. Constitution & Bill of Rights, so I can make you a copy.

Knowledge obliges us to learn & to pass it onto others. First we have The Idea, then The Information about The Idea; then The Organization on behalf of The Idea; then The Action, which achieves The Idea. It's a 5-step program, from the Idea to its Achievement. I've been as close to Achievement as Steps 3 & a bit of 4, then, SABOTAGE, & back to steps 1 & 2. Bad leadership can ruin any cause, no matter how worthwhile it is. I have experienced that on several occasions.

You are correct in observing how important knowledge is, for there is a Chinese saying about leadership: "There is the leader who coerces, the leader who inspires, but the best leader is the one who teaches, for his followers can say: 'See, we did it ourselves!'"

Your writing is very good minus a dictionary. I keep two English dictionaries on my desk, next to my typewriter, & I'm wearing them out. My German & Spanish dictionaries are on a nearby shelf. American spelling has its variations, & my exposure to British spelling adds to my confusion, so I rely on my dictionaries & keep them handy.

Please don't worry about my time, for in answering your letters, it serves a worthy purpose. For one thing, it keeps me out of gang-related activities & off the streets, although some have accused me of being a postaholic in view of my mail-mania, which I admit. I have been able to reduce my visits to the post office by carrying a bigger satchel. I also have access to several RVs for use in postal deliveries. In my social position, an RV means "Retirement Vehicle." This is a shopping cart with optional plastic bags. I am presently living in an upscale neighborhood, here in Brownest Yakima. We have signs in English & Spanish declaring that "This is a drug-free zone," which some understand to mean that free drugs are available. In my former neighborhood, they'd steal the signs. This is what I mean by 'up-scale.' The hispano-mestizo invasion floods into the USA, where employer-traitors give them jobs which their own people cannot provide, with tax-supported welfare assistance their own people cannot or will not provide in their countries. Whites must pay to multiply, but non-Whites are PAID to multiply, by White tax-payers. The Mexican Nazi Party (La Raza, The Race) is officially recognized by U.S. politicians. La Raza says U.S. immigration restrictions are "racist!" Indeed, the pot is calling the kettle "black." Previous immigrants got low wages, but no welfare, nor did they call their immigration "reconquest," as Mexicans do, in regard to their lost territories "stolen" by the Gringos. They prove that "nation" is not birth-place, but biology. As always, we live in an age of biopolitics, not geopolitics. It looks as if another amnesty is in store for these millions of invading aliens, to be followed by many more. The jew monkey on Woodrow Wilson's back, Mandel House, wrote in "Philip Dru, Administrator," that the USA would annex Mexico. That was the plan in fiction, but the fact is that Mexico is fast annexing the USA. Here, they receive low wages, which mean low taxes. Employers do not pay sufficient for them to support all their dependents. The tax-payers must pay under the present system, but not much longer. Warfare + welfare = Bust, even if our money was not worthless jew-I.O.U.s, which will hasten the collapse. DOWZ! & ORION!
