AIDS and the fate of humanity

Three weeks ago, in a convention hall in downtown Toronto, more than 2,000 volunteers gathered to kickoff the 2006 International AIDS Conference.

For me, the need to volunteer stemmed from a purely professional interest — to further my understanding of the pharmaceutical agenda in attacking the AIDS crisis.

However, what started as an academic interest evolved into a deeper understanding, witnessing and questioning of the immense devastation this plague has created.

It was not long into the conference when a revelation occurred — that the issue before us is not simply about AIDS as a disease. What we are fighting for, in fact, is the salvation of humanity.

AIDS is a disease that knows no boundaries and is constantly mutating. The development of the disease can be slowed but no known cure exists. While scientists work desperately in search of a cure, tens of millions continue to be infected.

With a death rate of more than 50,000 people per week, it is no wonder that societies are being decimated.

Our hearts should break for the millions of families who have left behind children who will grow up never being hugged, never knowing the love of a parent, never being loved period.

We should be angered at the destruction of infrastructure in a growing number of countries and we should protest the socio-economic plight of the remaining population scrambling to survive.

Aren't all the world's people entitled to the same health care, economic opportunities and life experiences enjoyed by those of us who are fortunate enough to have access to them?

Yet, somehow, we are not truly impassioned enough to act.

With our ever-growing fixation on and fascination with war, am I naive to believe that our priorities have become completely misguided?

As a nation, we are spending billions of dollars on the military when, by all accounts, our real global enemy is a disease known as AIDS?

Whatever the statistical outcome of this plague — the number of lives lost and being lost, the devastating impact on households, the health sector, education, economics (the list is endless) — the worldwide, horrific impact on humanity as a whole dizzyingly outweighs any known acts of man-made aggression. While we continue to be mesmerized by threats of destruction, we ignore the ongoing annihilation of those infected with this disease.

Imagine the impact that could be made if humanity collectively focused on designing and creating weapons to halt this genocide against mankind.

No one can say the money is not there — it is. But while we spend our billions on military equipment and perfecting ways to kill each other, we continue to squander opportunities to save lives and unite under the banner of true freedom: the right to life.

Some are attempting to make right the ills of our society, even in the much maligned pharmaceutical industry. Moral outrage over the denial of prohibitively costly medicines to those who cannot afford them is slowly

(some may argue glacially) eroding the importance of the traditional "bottom line."

While nowhere near being truly accessible, some companies are learning that supplying medicines at reduced cost and even, in some cases, sharing their knowledge with companies in developing countries do not have a negative effect on their profit margin.

Throughout the conference, we heard repeated testimony as to the urgent need for new courses of action to curb, and hopefully stop, the progression of this fatal disease.

We were encouraged and held in awe by the works of ordinary individuals, by their sincerity, commitment and perseverance in the face of overwhelming odds. Their deeds, supported by philanthropists such as Bill Gates and Bill Clinton, and by organizations such as the Stephen Lewis Foundation and UNAIDS, provided inspiration for the rest of us — that every one of us has the ability to make something right in this world.

~~AIDS no longer can be regarded as a black/gay/poor person's disease. It is a disease that affects us all, recognizing no colour, race or religious affiliation.~~

Its complexity generates the need for a collective and united effort to discover ways to ameliorate its impact on society.

Perhaps that is the lesson this tiny "bug" is trying to teach mankind — that the only way to survive and flourish on our beloved Earth is to ignore our differences and to work together, in mutual respect and understanding, toward a common, fundamental good: the right to life.

7 FEB 07. Dear Claude! Many thanks for your outstanding letters & great enclosures! Your letter to Selma Djukic is kindly worded, but demographically trenchant, as it needs to be. Frederick the Great said: "Who would defend everything defends nothing." I think Problem-Solvers are coming to agree that the world's main enemy is man, & that his numbers are now way too many, under current conditions.

We also recognize that the rich are becoming much richer, & fewer, in relation to the poor, who are becoming greater in numbers & greater in poverty, as the former members of the middleclass join the poor, & the poor breed like cockroaches. My question is: how many of the rich are Problem-Makers, & how many are Problem-solvers? Do the rich minority have a stake in the multiplication of the poor? If so, the rich are likewise Problem-Makers who need to be reduced in numbers, like the poor. From my reading, I recall that The Rockefeller Foundation included "population-control" as one of its items on its agenda. That is all that was mentioned, but "population-control" would include the whole spectrum of reductions, increases & transfers, & the means to achieve such goals. The Rockefellers are jews, like their fellow bankster-gangsters, so they are human parasites & predators, but can they serve humanity by limiting its numbers, as do natural predators & parasites in the non-human world, or will they behave as part of the problem? The rich appear to benefit from their rackets, by which they profit on the backs of the poor, so do they need an infinite increase in the poor, on behalf of infinite profit, on this finite planet? If so, these rich racketeers are the foremost Problem-Makers. So far, our Jew World Ordure is concentrating wealth & spreading poverty. If poverty were left alone, it would solve itself, for the excess poor would die & the remainder might find useful work, but not at jobs that continue to deplete & pollute the planet.

As you mentioned, the last thing we need is to save the useless-eaters from themselves at the expense & sacrifice of the Problem-Solvers. This is the evil of true Communism & also of "Christinsanity." It is a policy for universal suicide. Many thanks for educating Ms. Djukic on this important subject, if that is possible!

I read "Pawns in the Game" years ago. I understand that it is banned in Canada, where its author, Commander Guy Carr, lived. I think he also wrote "Red Fog Over America." Those books were, in my recollection, as good as the Ford series on "The International Jew." I wonder what Carr would say if he were alive today. I think it would be best for him not to be alive today, for he'd be charged for "thought-crime," like people we know. Poor fellow!

Thanks, also, for the good news on the apparent White revival in SA. It is obvious that all Whites need to do is change their minds about having babies. I read a tiny article, which you or G.W. may have given me about a projected increase in the German birthrate, due to a baby bonus. I'm sure the Turks will take advantage of that!

It's just as you said about our need for a fighting song to rally our Folk. It appears that you have been proved correct, I'm glad to learn. In America, all so-called White Nationalists seem to be singing "me-me-me" in total disharmony, with a chorus of "gimme-gimme-gimme." We are all expected to rally around the singers, not a song. I suppose events will be required to bring unity to us, since we can't seem to do it ourselves.

Thanks for the update on Wayne's colonization of Mars. I have argued with him on that point, specifically that, under our present Zionist Occupation Governments (ZOG), Wayne & his disciples would be the LAST people to get to Mars, since the technology would fall into enemy hands. What he is doing is ass-backwards: prepare for a flight to Mars before he has people on Earth to support him, in sufficient numbers & finances. I suggested Wayne study the blunders made after Columbus' discovery of The New World. The U.S. News articles refer. The idea of genetically-modifying mankind is a new concept for me. Does this mean that we clone ourselves? Eugenics is desirable & possible, but not without White sovereignty, as in The Third Reich. Perhaps we could use the Internet to arrange mating for eugenic purposes, unless ZOG deems that "hate-speech," as is apparently in the works in the USA. If the Zionists succeed in Congress, then the USA will be like Canada, Australia & Europe in regard to "Thought-Crime." All the best. ORION! & 88!
