

12 FEB 07. Ahoy, Ron! Many thanks for your great letter of 25 DEC 06, & the very informative enclosures. Sorry to learn of the death of a Picton Castle Crew member. According to family lore, my great grandfather Thomson was swept overboard by a wave, & deposited back on deck by a return wave. No news of that down here; at least none I saw.

No news from Wayne & his Martian Project.

I'm glad you are in a line of work in which you can maintain your drafting skills. The computer trade sounds like a Machiavellian paradise for sharp operators. A former girlfriend of mine is quite computer-savvy, but her jobs are usually short-term, from 3 to 6 months. She supplements that income with gardening during that season. Mobility is certainly essential for steady employment.

Yes, my correspondents are supplying me with lots of current information which is not available from the U.S. jewsmedia. South Africa is a source of good information, which I pass onto my other correspondents. China, which you mentioned in regard to the dispossession of peasants reminds me of Britain's Enclosure Act which caused Brit farmers of small holdings to be kicked off their land, so the squires could raise sheep. In ancient Rome, the small farmers who were the backbone of the legions were bought out by agribusinessmen who ran large holdings worked by slaves.

As you say, "Usrael" is being picked clean by the Chinese locusts, who are buying what ever they can with our worthless jew-I.O.U.s. Prices for concrete, rebar & asphalt have gone up, out of reach of state road repair budgets, & there is a thriving thieves' market for all sorts of scrap. I'd suggest that the USA sell its Statue of Liberty alias Commerce, which is made of copper. That would help with our uneven trade balance with China!

"China, the jews & World War III" did not foresee U.S. indebtedness to China, but Hitler foretold it in his Secret Book, back in 1928. I have a copy of Thomas Chittum's "Civil War Two," which I'd be happy to send you, if there's a good chance it can make it through CAN-ZOG customs. Just let me know! U.S. bookdealers designate Canada as a problem country. As Loompanics Publishers advertise: "Notice to prisoners & Canadians: your authorities may seize your book order without warning. No guarantee of delivery can be made to prisoners & Canadians."

Re bio-fuels: "Beyond Thunder Dome" depicted a society based on pig shit power. Now we read of such technology being applied to cow manure for methane production & electrical generation. But food into fuel is a net energy loss, as I understand, & it has increased the cost of corn for the livestock industry. In respect of global-warming, a South African report mentioned the export of Sasol technology for liquifying coal, that old Nazi formula, which will increase CO<sub>2</sub> production at the same time we deplete oxygen-producing forests. "Global-warming" may be a ZOG-scam, since a team of Danish researchers in Antarctica took core samples which revealed earth's cooling & warming cycles long before man appeared on this planet. "Global-warming" would be a pretext to inflict a "1984" standard of living on subject populations, or maybe a "Soylent Green" standard of living.

I congratulate you on your choice of women, or lack thereof, since they can certainly turn a victor into a victim. Zundel was long such a statistic of vixen-victimhood, whether he knew it or not. Paul's unfortunate choice in the female department also surprised me, for as he grew older he grew less wise; maybe due to alcohol.

It's funny you should mention a jew builder who intends on using tax-payers' money to help him make a private profit. A local parasite has been doing the same here in Brownest Yakima,<sup>50</sup> the practice must be catching on. The jew takes the profit & the tax-payers take the risk.

The saga of your buddy who switched from a good job to a bad one, at sea, reminds me of "Death Ship" by B. Traven. He should get himself a copy to read when he next ships out. Maybe Paul can publish an advice column so such people can solve their problems. This may be a way to keep Paul busy, so as to avoid incurring additional problems of his own.

What a relief to read that your local jewspaper resumed publishing TV listings. That shows there's still life in stone age technology.

Virtual reality via computer seems to be in vogue, so why ride a real Beemer when you can sit on the couch & experience 'virtual biking'? I recently heard a description of the virtual sports available on WII. Tennis was described as a participatory action sport, for the WII players had to move around, almost as if they were playing tennis. One kid improved his serves by pressing two buttons on his playing device. His mom wondered how WII tennis would prepare kids for real tennis. Would they automatically try to press two buttons on

2) their real rackets to make a serve? Methinks the Pavlovian responses generated by WII would be inappropriate for real tennis, especially since WII has announcers & wildly cheering crowds. After a long WII tennis match, a 12 year old girl complained of pain in her right shoulder, due to waving her WII around. Some kids even work up a sweat. It may become a virtual holocaust, & virtual sports may cause an increase in real junkfood consumption. Such a deal! You commented years ago on the lack of kids playing outdoors. We concluded that there was (1) A lack of kids & (2) that they were doing things indoors, like watching TV. Turd World immigration/invasion should reverse the lack of kids, who will be marauding in search of things to wreck &/or steal. As they grow up, they will maraud in search of people to rape & rob. The USA is rapidly raising a bunch of gang-banger spicklettes who are unskilled in productive work, but who are learning how to become druglords & nigger-killers, as in Los Angeles. Let's see how the 'macho' robo-cops deal with racist bandidos. It has been pointed out in counter-insurgency textbooks that cops should not be militarized, for they should be close to the communities which they police. Distance degrades intelligence-gathering, & a hostile, arrogant & aggressive image makes cops seem more like an enemy occupation force. I knew fellows who worked at the casino where I became head of security/surveillance, largely by default, because of my maturity & experience relating to security of people & premises. My subordinates seemed to be wannabe cops, preferably SWAT team members. One wore a ninja vest on which I half expected to see handgrenades a-dangling. I told them that Security = Loss-Prevention. We are there to prevent losses of property, money & CUSTOMERS. Scaring customers tends to deter their return, so our image should be "customer-helpers," rather than customer-bashers. If a customer is a winner, we may help him get to his car safely; if a customer is rowdy, we may help him to leave, a.s.a.p., with best wishes that he return when de-Indianized, that is, less wild & more sober. My experience as a former bureaucrat greatly assisted us in passing Gambling Commission inspections, for all statutory items were in their proper places & up to date. When the ostensible security apparatus showed signs of dysfunction, I told the boss that he needed someone with colonial civil service experience. He agreed, so I was able to sort out work schedules, stow items, such as videotape archives & other records properly, &c. Considering all or likely things which could have gone wrong, we were pretty lucky. As it was, the operation went broke, for lack of customers & high overhead costs due to Gambling Commission requirements, such as having dealers ready when there were no customers; keeping standard hours, when there were no customers, &c. Then there soon appeared lots of well-heeled competitors, & then one day, we went out of business. The Sports Center still exists, under new owners who wisely refrain from re-opening the 5 Blackjack tables which bankrupted the former owners. I said to acquaintances that the owners would have been much better off if they'd installed 5 washers & dryers instead of 5 Blackjack tables. The customers could do their laundry & order food & drinks. That's what this town needs: a luxury laundromat!

Your mention of high wages & even higher living expenses seems to be a general malaise in North America. One Silicon Valley police chief discovered that he could no longer afford to live in the town where he worked. A correspondent in Washington DC gave up a job because he could not pay the rent. New guards for the prison in Walla Walla, WA can't afford to live in Walla Walla. The influx of refugees from Mexifornia is driving up housing prices & rents, along with the inflation in taxes, fuel, food & electricity. Our situation is straight out of The Protocols, where it says that "we shall agitate the workers on behalf of higher wages, & we shall make sure that prices rise even higher." Nice sheenies: they always have us Goyim on their minds. Of course, there is little worker-agitation for higher wages, since the pool of 'cheap labor' is infinite, with open borders. The Robber Barons of Capitalism are back, big time. How many ways can we spell "DEPRESSION"?

Thanks for the reference on the economy of coal. People used to call it King Coal, but now, it's Emperor Oil, which has double value, not only as a fuel & source of chemicals, but as a cause of conflicts & wars, which are "the jews' harvests," according to economist Sombart, who has been labelled a jew, himself, by one writer. His book on Capitalism & jews refers. Capitalism of the Adam Smith variety had its religious roots in Calvinism, which was rooted in Judaism. In Calvinism, the rich were closest to Yahweh, since he blessed them in this life. The poor were deemed sinners whom Yahweh had cursed in this life & the 'next'.

3) This viewpoint became popularized as "The Gospel of Wealth." Rich rascals were deemed as experts in every field, since they were 'close to God.' Reporters asked such ricos as Henry Ford what he thought about all things deemed newsworthy, whether he had a clue or not about them. The rich were treated like popes in regard to their alleged knowledge & divine connections.

It seems that your unfortunate acquaintances' misfortunes are due to their ignorance of the rules of the game, & their ignorance of current economic conditions. Rule #1 is always to live BELOW your means, for, in the words of the old music hall song: "Your own best friend is your pocket in the end, so always put a little bit away..." My Scottish grannie taught me that one, which she'd heard in Scotland, of all places (!), in the 1890s. Your pogeysless buddy with the RRSPs can't get welfare. Nor could I if I had any such savings, for ZOG rightly figures, 'why pay one who already has money?' I view money as a convenience which stands to lose its value, sooner or later. A man is a fool to protect his money with his life. Dying rich is a fool's game. The American Dream is to die comfortably, owing huge sums of money to lenders, &/or reaching the age of 80, to die of being shot by a jealous husband. When one army associate told me that I was a fool to refuse my entry into the spy racket, I replied that I prefer not to be the richest corpse on the beach. I was wiser than I knew. For a 21 year old, I was a real geezer. Subsequent findings in regard to others' experiences in the spook business confirm that I was right. Publicity proved to be my best protection from being drafted into such activities. It was said of the KGB, but equally applicable to all espionage apparatus, that blackmail was used to recruit agents, including threats of prison. My 'insurance' was to let every apparatus know who I was, so they figured that I was a well-advertised would be, could be spy. Since I was deemed persona non grata in 5 countries, at last count, word had gotten around. I think I might feel sorry for any fool who stole my I.D. Psst, smile. You're on Candid Camera! When I was kicked out of the USA & banned from all Soviet Bloc countries in 1969, I published an article about my experiences in Peru's OIGA Magazine, with my photo. OIGA (Listen) was Peru's version of TIME or JEWSEWEEK. I was already unwanted in the USSR because of an article I wrote for The Journal of Contemporary Revolutions, entitled "The National Bourgeoisie: Traitorous Technicians to The Third World?" This article was in response to an article in the CFR's publication, FOREIGN AFFAIRS, in which a Soviet writer described USSR policy in terms of supporting the so-called "National Bourgeoisie" against the capitalists of the "First World." I wrote that such a policy was impossible because the "N.B." were minions of capitalist exploitation. My viewpoint was on behalf of self-determination & economic self-sufficiency, that is, national independence, which offended East-ZOG & West-ZOG simultaneously. It also offended the Peruvian rulers who were USA-USSR minions in the exploitation of Peru's natural resources, as described by none other than Noam Chomsky, whose book: "The Washington Connection & 3rd World Fascism," confirms my thesis. I define fascism as corporate statism, as described by Benito Mussolini, a Mafia-style government, similar to ancient Rome, which was ruled by & for its minority plutocrats. The USA was always so, as is Britain, since The Bank of England & Rothschild rule, & before, under feudalism, whose rich were also warlords. As my professor of International Relations said: "There are no big secrets." I wanted to learn about them, so as to invest my time & labor efficiently. I figured, erroneously, it turned out, that I could learn what I needed to know about the Big Picture, without learning the details that would put me into the spook business. I could know that a country had armored forces, but not what kind, how many & where. Such detailed knowledge would be dangerous, but not, I thought, general knowledge. I offended some powerful crooks, & I'm lucky to be alive. My unconscious timing was in my favor, since the USSR part of the ZOG's racket was about to be wound up. I was not striving for omniscience, but sufficient knowledge for governing my own life. I thus lucked out, so I am an American Success Story, being retired & living off the ZOG. The Good Life is best enjoyed in the slow lane.

Re ballast for sailing ships: In Colombia I visited a fortified hacienda which had a central courtyard with a fountain. The owner told me that the tiles for the floor had come from a Moorish palace in Spain, & had been brought over as ballast on a galleon. His wife was about to tear up those "old" tiles in order to replace them with linoleum. Such 'culture!' The tiles were at least 800 years old, & would have lasted for another 800 years. I feel lucky that I never saw the linoleum version of the patio. My great grandfather died, apparently, because the cargo broke loose on his freighter during a storm in the Irish Sea, as he was leaving Liverpool, bound for India, with dredging equipment. The ship went down

4) with all hands. The wreck had to be dynamited, for it had sunk exactly on course & thus endangered the shipping lane. The bell of The Lutine was duly rung at Lloyds of London, to announce the sinking. The Lutine had belonged to other relatives of mine in the Orkneys. I understand that modern ships use liquid ballast which is pumped into strategically-positioned ballast tanks. I understand that some German U-boats used mercury in their ballast tanks, & one sunken U-boat in the Caribbean is deemed a prize for salvors, since its mercury is worth a fortune.

So much for the 'romance of steam' in which poor flunkies had to expand the boiler tubes under full steam! I wonder how Paul likes that part of his job: something to drink about.

Yes, Saddam showed considerable panache in his execution. I wonder if the war criminal, Bush, will show such manliness when his time comes. Some pundits claimed that Saddam's hanging was a breach of execution 'etiquette,' if there is such a thing. What is the punishment for 'unseemly behavior' on the part of the one being hanged? It must be terrible, perhaps a fine, or denial of prison privileges. I'm reminded of the cartoon which showed a prisoner tied to a post, in front of a firing squad. The officer offers him a cigarette, & the prisoner says, "No thanks. I'm trying to quit."

The Jew, Ted Koppel, said, as I recall, that the USA cannot afford to leave Iraq, because its oil is a major U.S. interest. If that is true, Mr. Jew, then why did the U.S. go to war in the first place? Did we do it for Israel, rather than U.S. interests? Could be! The murdered U.S. Defence Secretary, Forrestal, objected to U.S. recognition of Israel, because it ran counter to U.S. interests in The Middle East, namely oil. The Jew, Truman, recognized Israel about 5 minutes after the USSR did, as I recall. Forrestal was right! One dumb Goy said to me that "Israel is our lifeline in The Middle East." I replied: "Since when is a hangman's noose a 'lifeline'?" As you say, China's strength is that its government seems to serve Chinese interests, rather than aliens' interests, & China is not a democracy, but neither is it a hypocrisy, like the USA, so it has no need to lie to itself.

Your deceased Dutch woman's recollection of domestic solidarity in Holland during hard times seems to reflect similar solidarity in the USA during WW II, which crumbled during The Cuban Missile Crisis in 1962, when I was in the USA. I'd foresee even less solidarity in the U.S. version of The Roman Empire in times of real stress. Al Gore blurted in a public appearance that "We mustn't say it's every man for himself." Well, that's what I saw in 1962. Gore said it during the presidential election campaign, apropos of nothing, for I heard no question from his audience which pertained to his statement. Perhaps there was, but I didn't hear it. It seemed like an alarming admission on his part. "Every man for himself" is, after all, "The American Way," & "devil take the hindmost." What else can we expect from "the best government money can buy?" I understand that Gore's relative, Gore Vidal, lives in Rome to avoid the coming collapse of the USA, which he predicted on a televised interview, which I saw in Canada on Zud-TV.

Re The Reluctant Sailor: breathing an atmosphere of oil vapors & combustion fumes is how my father got his fatal lung cancer. It makes sense to me.

Thanks for your observation that "you can lead a horde to wisdom, but you cannot make it think." This shows us that the jewsmedia of disinformation & illusion has done its job well!

I guess break-ins are your local growth industry. It seems that the damage to the door was worth more than anything they'd steal. That's downright nasty. I hope your rent doesn't go up as a result. Gang graffiti is a growing complaint & expense in Brownest Yakima, & the local authorities want stiffer penalties for those caught for defacing public & private property. Rots of ruck! As usual, Canada punishes the innocent, rather than the guilty. The victims of vandalism must pay, but not the vandals.

Thanks for the great lines from "The Monkey Trial" alias "Inherit the Wind," which I saw the same version of, I think. I was a bit confused when I read the list of actors & the names of the characters whom they portrayed, for I was expecting to see real names from the real trial, such as Scopes, Clarence Darrow & William Jennings Bryan, who died during the trial, allegedly from over-eating in the heat. The Jews hated Bryan for his populism & his resistance to the bankers & objections to U.S. entry into WW I. In the play, his character has a stroke while trying to speak into switched off microphones. Yes, it was a great play. I have Mencken's last interview, which I'll send you when I find it. All the best & ORION!

Eric
