Authorities see tensions rising as groups grow

Carl D. Wynn Jr., who last fall posed as a U.S. border agent and wrongly suggested that a Little Rock construction company had hired illegal immigrants, has come to symbolize how the divisive immigration debate can progress from legal expressions of opposition to offensive action.

Wynn, also accused of attempting to sabotage the same company by planting tire-ripping spikes outside the business, has quickly come to represent a "troubling" development within the radical ranks of the anti-immigration movement, said Little Rock U.S. Attorney Tim Griffin, whose office won a guilty plea last month from the laborer.

Since 2000, the number of extremist groups has increased by 40%, according to the Southern Poverty Law Center, which closely tracks the groups' activities. In the past two years, the growth has been largely driven by the emergence of about 144 "nativist" groups that oppose immigration.

"When folks try to take law enforcement matters into their own hands, it creates a potentially dangerous situation," Griffin said. "Mr. Wynn's actions are troubling to us."

Charles Frahm, FBI deputy assistant director for counterterrorism, said there is increasing concern that the most radical elements of the anti-immigration wing may be "susceptible" to recruitment by white supremacists and other groups inclined toward violence.

Police departments across the country also are uneasy as political divisions regarding immigration enforcement have raised local tensions.

"This is certainly a concern for every police chief in the country," said Charlotte-Mecklenburg, N.C. Police Chief Darrel Stephens, president of the national Major City Chiefs Association. "As long as the issue remains unsettled, the tension grows."

Perhaps not since the anti-government militia movement came to prominence in the early 1990s, the Southern Poverty Law Center says, have so many groups embraced such a common campaign for dealing with what they describe as failed government policy.

"The infection is spreading," said Mark Potok, editor of the center's Intelligence Report.

"It's no longer unusual to hear vilifying fairy tales of immigrant-borne secret conspiracies and massive criminality on radio, cable television and even in the mouths of pandering politicians," he said.

Among the most abrasive figures on the anti-immigration movement, according to the center, is Donald Pauly of Nevada.

In an interview with USA TODAY, Pauly's voice is calm but serious.

Frustrated by the surge of illegal immigrants into Las Vegas, the self-employed electrical engineer formed the Emigration Party of Nevada headquartered largely on the Internet. Pauly has advanced some radical ideas for dealing with illegal immigrants. He openly advocates the deployment of government snipers to the porous southwest border and favors the forced sterilization of Mexican women after the birth of their first child.

"For the time being, we do not associate with anyone who is violent unless in self-defense," Pauly said in a later e-mail message. "However, I remind you of this quote of Thomas Jefferson's:

"The tree of Liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots & tyrants. It is its natural manure."

The radical discourse has become increasingly common across the USA.

Last year, an Arizona jury leveled a judgment of nearly $100,000 against a rancher for threatening a Mexican-American family.

Prior to the court decision, the rancher, Roger Barnett, gained national attention for his efforts to round up illegal immigrants who had cut paths through his property.

"There is not a clear understanding (among the public) of who is ultimately responsible for enforcing immigration laws," Stephens said. "The tension will only increase until the issue is resolved."

Say no to amnesty

To the editor — During the 1970s and '80s, our government officials and economic leaders insisted we reduce family size to prevent environmental degradation, depleting natural resources and a lower quality of life. We complied.

The following information is obtained from <http://www.numbersusa.com/overpopulation/ourlostfuture.html>

Today, the government tells us we need more immigrant population to fund the baby boom generation during retirement. So, either they are lying now, or they were lying then. Since the 1965 immigration act, we have increased our population by 50 percent, mostly from immigration, while ancestors of our Founding Fathers are dying off, realizing children are unaffordable unless you are wealthy or on welfare.

We have major water shortages in the United States, yet still more immigrants come, as our government demands more conservation from U.S. citizens. The United States has the third largest population in the world, next only to China and India; what they have in common is poverty.

These same officials insist immigrants are doing jobs we won't do, which is false; we can't do these jobs for less than livable wages. The government explains how immigrants will finance SSI and Medicare for U.S. retirees, yet immigrants spend $1 in taxes for every $3 they receive in social services, according to <http://www.washingtontimes.com/national/20070405-123141-6880r.htm>

Our government is corrupt and must be replaced. Until then, go to www.numbersusa.com where you can e-mail free pre-written faxes to our leaders condemning their proposed amnesty, lest they be voted out of office. Do your patriotic duty, or live in the squalor you will have created by doing nothing.

USA TODAY 5-21-07

6-6-07. Hail Chad! Many thanks for your most welcome letter of June 4th, & the revealing article on "anti-immigrant extremists" in USA Today. ZOG does not want anyone to discourage the invaders, so it looks as if the North American Union is proceeding unimpeded. All things are falling into place for eventual political union of Canada, USA & Mexico, which our banksters have wanted for centuries. We are almost as far along the road to the Jew World Ordure as are the Europeans, with their European Union & common currency, the euro. The North American Union will have its currency, the "amero," as I hear.

I believe that the best therapy to eliminate the "prison mentality" would be day passes for inmates. The prison would operate like a Youth Hostel, but the residents would have to be in during certain hours, such as bedtime & mealtimes. In their absence, the prisoners could stroll around town, go to the library, &c., maybe get jobs which would conform to the prison schedule. If a prisoner 'forgot' to come 'home', it would indicate that he was cured of the Prisoner Mentality. Such a deal!

I was discussing 2 problems with a local politician, whose name I shall not mention to protect her career. (1) The growing prison population & (2) The growing demand for electricity. My solution would be to sentence offenders to megawatts, not years. The megawatts would be generated in a massive prison gymnasium, in which the exercise machines would run generators, which would feed power into the grid, which could also be stored in batteries. Not only would this be energy-efficient, but it would be an incentive to prisoners, for they could work off their sentence sooner! The motto of the prison system would be inspiring: "Work Makes You Free!" She thought she'd heard that slogan somewhere, but wasn't sure. Stay tuned! The guards could also pitch in for bonuses. Their slogan could be: "We light up your life!" There is also the Chinese slogan: "Many hands make light (s) work." I can foresee a bright future for our ZOG-gulags.

Yes, psychological warfare has many tactics, such as raising one's hope & dashing it. There's a reverse tactic, such as fake executions, in which the prisoner expects he will die, but instead gets a stay of execution. The victim may come to identify with his captors, since he knows his life is in their hands. This mentality is called "The Stockholm Syndrome" in which terrorists invaded & occupied an embassy in Stockholm & threatened their hostages with death. During the standoff with the authorities, the hostages sided with the terrorists! There was the case of the newspaper heiress, Patty Hearst, who was allegedly kidnapped by members of The Symbionese Liberation Army. To everyone's surprise, she was photographed taking part in an armed bank robbery, & gained the nickname of Tanya. Tanya had been a female associate of Che Guevara, before his death in Bolivia. Che was betrayed by Moscow, & Tanya may have given away his location. I digress.

Americans use the word 'guy', but some linguists say it is a slight mispronunciation of "Goy" or "Gentile." Guy is used in Britain in connection with Guy Fawkes, the Roman Catholic conspirator who attempted to blow up Parliament with gunpowder around 1606. The Brits celebrate Guy Fawkes Day with fireworks, like July 4th in Usrael. During the Brit-fest, a "Guy" is burnt up, perhaps with accompanying fireworks. The Guy effigy is a grotesque, scarecrow-like figure, so no one would refer to another person as a "guy" in Britain, as we do in the USA. In Brit-speak, "chap" is used instead: "I met this chap in a pub, who told me he was a Yank." In Africa, I'd be called a "Canadian," on good days. On bad days, I'd be called a "bloody Yank." Even if one is a Southerner, Brits refer to him as a "Yank." That's why some say "life isn't fair." ZOG knows!

Yes, Frahm is usually a Jewish name. NPR jewsradio finally admitted today that the TB fugitive, Andrew Speaker, is a Jew.

I've heard of .308 caliber rifles, but never a .408. I'm not a weapons expert. As I understand, ZOG forces use a .50 caliber sniper rifle which can bring down elephants & small aircraft, if they become annoying. 2,600 yards is quite a distance. Standard military ironsights are set at 600 yards.

Yes, Goyim are indeed suckers & sheep. I enclose a copy of FDR's executive order forbidding U.S. citizens from holding gold & gold certificates as of 1 May 1933. You will note that all gold was to be turned over to the Federal Reserve, the private Jew bank. Such a deal! I would not have kept "gold certificates," but if I had any gold, I'd have kept it. Most Goyim had no gold to hold, by 1933, which was almost the depth of The Depression of 1929-1939. Senator Charles Lindbergh Sr. called The Federal Reserve Act an act of treason, so he was roughed up by Bureau of Investigation agents, which later became the FBI. Most things change, but White Goyim are getting no smarter. Take care!
