

11 Jewlie 07. Hail James! Many thanks for your letter of 5 Jewlie 07. I appreciate your offer of assistance, for I receive important information from many sources, some outside the ZOG's gulags, some from inside, which is at least as important, if not more so.

I strongly agree with your analysis of the isolated, separate, but not independent, such as the Amish, who exist because no one wants their land...yet. Lack of land is what apparently limits the Amish population, for large families cannot share the existing land equally. I understand the French did not practice primogeniture, as did other peoples, so French farmers practiced birth control for centuries; otherwise, the parcels of equally divided land would be too small to live on, in terms of making one's living. The advantage of primogeniture was that estate size could be maintained, but the last-born were "bred away from the table." As I understand, my Scottish grandfather was the youngest in his family, so when his sea-captain father died at age 50, with the sinking of his ship in a violent storm, in which the cargo shifted, my grandfather was like a fish out of water. He was raised as a gentleman. That used to mean he did not have to work for a living. Gentlemen often worked hard, but not to earn their livings! That's why a British officer's pay was insufficient to meet his required living expenses, as Churchill wrote, when he had to write his mother for money to meet his living expenses in India. Okay, we might suggest he limit his expenses by selling off his polo pony, but playing polo was part of an officer's job description, so that would be 'improper,' like appearing out of uniform. When I first visited Canada, I was told what The Governor-General earned. His salary seemed enormous, with the inclusion of a majestic mansion, but our guide said that the G.G. had to pay for the lavish state functions out of his own pocket, so he already had to be wealthy, before he took on the G.G.'s job. It's The Law of the Contrary: if you need the salary, you don't get the job.

As you say, the first requirement for independence is self-defence, ZOG forbid! The Amish are driven from the lands they have improved, like the Mennonites, or they are killed on the spot by their predators. The fact that they now occupy land in the USA is no proof that their way is any improvement over those who do not defend themselves, nor the land on which they must live. Wise men have noted that "life is struggle." That determines one's fitness to live. As you say, the process of decay, when slow, is no sign of survival.

Many group distinctions, as you noted, are artificial & trivial, toward the feeding of priestly-parasites or 'learned elders.' But what I do know is that Whites & their way of life; their bare existence, requires the concept of White Nationhood for our survival. Of course, if Whites do not want to survive, then there is no problem. "Life is struggle." Our task is to form a real & relevant Aryan in-group, for Aryan Survival; Marxism & Christinsanity to the contrary.

Self-sufficiency is true independence. Our relationships may thus be established on what we can provide them, rather than what we can get out of them. One mongrel acquaintance needed other people to sustain his own sense of existence, as if others were mirrors by which he could prove to himself that he existed. He was certainly not one to visit the woods alone! Many sheeple cannot stand to be in their own company. At the very least, they need a TV or radio to fill their unspeakable personal void. "Empty husks," as one writer described them.

Machiavelli's advice to The Prince harks back to Rome, which is fitting in his case. Does a ruler wish to be feared or loved? My answer is that his enemies should fear him & his Folk should love him. Frederick the Great declared: "I refuse to rule over slaves." He also defined himself as "The first servant of his state/people. A king should be 'kin,' not a landlord. "Ich dien," "I serve", is still the motto of the British/jewish "Royal Family." As you say, if people are ZOG-fearing when they have the means at hand to defend themselves, what sort of 'men' can they be? I believe that most sheeple are ZOG-loving, by default, for they never thought about it. Some have said that they wonder why I was not killed. I say that I'd already signed my life away when I became a soldier, so life thereafter is gravy, & it can come to an end at any moment. The recent gunfire outside my window reminds me of that. Instead of calling it "Administrative Segregation," why not call it "Administrative Meditation?" All the best & ORION!
