

IMPACT

"THE BATTLE OF ALGIERS" COMES HOME TO FRANCE!

CULTURAL, BIOLOGICAL AND POLITICAL ANALYSIS - ALTERNATIVE VIEWPOINTS

R rioting mobs, described by most mainstream media as "immigrants" – mainly Moslems from various parts of Africa and Asia – rampaged through France for weeks on end, torching thousands of motor vehicles, buses, schools, shopping malls, tourist hotels and fire stations. Shots were fired at the police with live ammunition, and many policemen were injured. A police station was ransacked. Thousands of extra police had to be mobilised. 3,000 rioters were arrested.

Armed with picks, guns, molotov cocktails and baseball bats, the rioters continued their relentless swathe of destruction every night and then increasingly even in the day.

French prime minister Villepin said: "I refuse to accept that organised gangs can lay down the law in certain neighbourhoods."

Interior minister Nicolas Sarkozy vowed to clean them out of the estates "with a power-hose". A state of emergency was declared and a curfew imposed by the state.

The trouble is said to have been triggered by the accidental electrocution of two Moslems who hid in a sub-station in north-eastern Paris to escape police, but this has been questioned as being a fabrication.

Many neighbourhoods in France, declared by the Moslems as no-go areas to the police, are controlled by gangs dealing in drugs and stolen property. According to the London Daily Mail, authorities say drug traffickers and Islamic militants helped to organise the unrest, using the Internet and mobile phones. A petrol-bomb factory was discovered, and 150 Molotov cocktails were ready for use. Police chief Aureal described the gangs his officers faced as "prepared, structured, armed". He added: "They have attacked us also with picks, petanque balls, many Molotov cocktails."

Host to more than 5 million Moslems, France has the largest Islamic population in western Europe. Germany also has an enormous immigrant population, including more than a million Moslems, mostly Turks. As feared, the conflagration jumped over borders, causing rioting and arson in the Netherlands, Belgium, Denmark and Germany.

The euro fell to two-year lows.

The following article by a senior journalist at the London Daily Mail, gives a clear picture of the background to the recent events.

NIGHT after night [- week after week -], France has been under attack from its Arab Moslem minority, with the French authorities having totally lost control of the streets.

What started as an ugly localised disturbance in a grotty Paris suburb, spiralled into an unprecedented ...

(Continued on page 6)

IMMIGRANT INSURRECTION IN FRANCE 'PREPARED, STRUCTURED, ARMED'

EUROPE ON HIGH ALERT

IN THIS ISSUE . . .

- 1 Immigrant Insurrection in France
- 3 SA Current Affairs
- 4 Africa
- 4 News in Brief
- 6 France (continued)
- 9 Middle East
- 9 Far and Wide
- 11 More about Katrina
- 12 Rebuilding Western Civilization
(reviewed by James Chambers)
- 14 Demographics
- 16 Confessions of a Hit-Man
- 17 Secret Agent
- 17 Venezuela, the Oil Pot
- 18 The Pebble Bed
- 19 Readers Forum
- 20 The Frauenkirche reconstructed

Note to Subscribers

FIRST of all, your editor would like to wish readers a happy Christmas and everything of the best for 2006.

At the same time, we wish to thank subscribers for their continued support of this little magazine.

As many of you know, Impact is a shoestring operation, having neither big sponsors nor advertising to keep it afloat. It depends entirely on the support base of its subscribers, in the form of subscriptions, donations and recruitment of new readers. With the declining economic situation not only in South Africa but in most parts of the world, everyone is having to tighten their belts.

Where it is possible, we hope readers who are in a position to do so will remember us on their Christmas list and throughout the next year.

MAFIA killings are not exactly Christmas fare, but this is current and important, because the Mafia has come to town here in the New South Africa. We know that the Red Mafia in the USA and the Israeli Mafia both had their origins in the Soviet Union. We know also that the first thing a criminal syndicate does when it sets up operations anywhere is to ensure that gambling, drugs and prostitution enterprises are operational. If not, they set up their own, because everyone knows that money laundering and tax dodging are not possible without them.

Brett Kebble, known to be one of Johannesburg's most notorious gangsters, was assassinated recently in Melrose, northern Johannesburg. He was found slumped over the steering wheel of his luxury Mercedes Benz, after having died in a hail of bullets. One of the many conundrums of the case was that the Jewish Kebble had a Christian funeral.

He was a member of the ANC, funding them to the tune of hundreds of millions of rands. His praises were sung by ANC cabinet minister Aziz Pahad, the black NUM mining union, and certain revolutionary organisations. Black empowerment, they lamented, would suffer as a result of his death.

Brett Kebble had close connections within the government, especially with the Zuma faction and the Zuma-supporting ANC and SACP youth leagues. He was virtually untouchable.

Regular attempts were made to establish why he never rendered returns to the Department of Revenue Services over the last ten years, and never paid a cent in taxes, despite earnings of hundreds of millions. All attempts by lower-ranking officials to investigate were squashed by high government officials within the Department.

However, his companies were all recently suspended on the JSE for not producing annual financial statements. Over R238-millions' worth of shares mysteriously went missing and he refused to divulge how they disappeared. With many rumours flying around, and with increasing pressures on Kebble, his bankers refused to provide further financing for his mines unless he stepped down as CEO, which he did. They then appointed one of their own people, but Kebble remained on the board.

Rumours abound that there was great concern among his cohorts in the murky world in which Kebble moved that their names might surface in any investigation into the fall of the Kebble companies.

Hazel Crane – a bosom friend of Winnie Mandela and a former PR for Solomon ("Sol") Kerzner of Sun International – was on her way on a day in November 2003 to give evidence in a court case against another Jewish gangster (the media dubs it the 'Israeli Mafia'), by the name of Lior Saat. Saat was accused of murdering Crane's husband, gangster Shai Avissar. Apparently, a diamond deal between the two had gone sour. According to the charge sheet, Saat had bludgeoned Avissar to death with a baseball bat, and buried his body in a shallow grave on a small-holding outside of Pretoria.

On her way to testify in the case against Lior Saat, Crane was gunned down in her car, in an identical fashion to the recent Kebble killing and on the same suburban corner. This was not the first time an attempt was made on her life: In May 2003 a drive-by shooting failed, but one of her car's passengers was wounded.

Lior Saat, the accused, was himself the subject of a drive-by shooting on June 14, 2001, while being transported to the Johannesburg Magistrate's Court from the old Brixton police cells. Although he was only wounded, another prisoner died from gunshot wounds.

Two other mafia members – Julio Bascelli and Carlo Binne – were killed in Mozambique shortly before Saat's arrest in April 2001. Saat was himself arrested in Mozambique and extradited for trial to South Africa.

The case against Lior Saat was finally withdrawn in March 2004, after the last real witness against him, police Investigating Officer Wayne Kukard, was found dead at his home. Saat was released from police custody and fled home to Israel.

Obviously, the Israeli Mafia is more than willing to act against its own members who step out of line and to XPD them. One wonders who it was that Brett Kebble swindled the last time around, resulting in his 'termination'.

Of course, it could have been a politically motivated murder.

S.A. CURRENT AFFAIRS

Parallel universe with SA

● WHEN it is asserted that “the soil is the Maori’s true arena” and that “the Maori is a natural son of the soil”, the public generally clings to the erroneous opinion that the Maori is a farmer.

It is easy to refute these well-meant errors. The Maori is no tiller of the soil, and he has no inherited instincts which might be aroused and utilised as a tiller of the soil. Today, only a lunatic would ask – unless he did so to insult – “How are your crops this year?”

Nothing would induce the Maori to produce more than his consumption warranted [thus, subsistence farming]. So when a crop suffered, he did too.

New Zealand Herald, Auckland NZ

● HUNDREDS of indigenous Indians occupied 14 cattle ranches in southern Mato Grosso del Sur province of Argentina. Indigenes claim these were ‘stolen’ from their ancestors. Legal owners say the land was purchased from the government land company as long ago as the 1930s. Indigenes say they would ‘settle’ for the largest three properties. The legal land owners threaten to retake their property by force.

It is not only SA, Rhodesia, Australia and New Zealand that face ‘land rights’ claims. It is co-ordinated. Every year the U.N. runs a week-long Conference of Indigenous Peoples, including ‘disenfranchised’ natives from every country. Tactics are discussed for the coming year, then the conferees go home to carry them out. This is why the same tactics recur throughout the world. In addition, the SA situation is exacerbated by Oxfam (in Britain) contributing funds and tactical expertise.

● THE Aborigine ghetto of Sydney, Redfern, only burned for nine hours in February 2004, with cars and buildings going up in smoke. Aboriginal leaders claimed that a teenager died in trying to escape from the police. In the 1980s the Abos began burning out all whites from the inner city suburb, aided by state and Federal government funds to ‘buy out’ any whites willing to flee. Now Abos have their own little urban fiefdom. And what do they do with it? asks The Nat. & Internat. News Service. Whine and complain about poverty, discrimination and joblessness.

Not to be outdone, blacks in SA succeeded in not only burning down the historic Pretoria central station a few years ago, but this month burned a R20-million train, utterly destroying it “because it was late”. Also when the famous luxury Blue Train happened to crash into the Trans-Karoo Express, the Blue Train was looted of every movable item.

Criminals

SOMETHING that leaked out in spite of pains taken to keep it secret, is that during 2003 and 2004, the number of police found guilty of criminal cases in SA was 2800, that is, 27 a week.

The recent amnesty of prisoners in SA was because of the serious over-crowding in jails, and was apparently meant for first offenders. But many who were released were – due to “administrative errors” – hardened murderers, robbers and rapists. Of those who committed their favourite crimes after release, 130 were re-arrested for murder and rape.

Population of SA

THE Bureau for Market Research of UNISA has found that the average annual population growth of 1,51% for the period 1996-2002 has fallen in the period 2001-2005 to 0,87%. [This, in spite of untold millions crossing our borders from the rest of Africa.]

Whites had a negative growth of minus 0,05% (due in part to large numbers emigrating on account of crime and black empowerment).

The BMR found that SA has a population of 47-million.

The average life expectancy of the total SA population fell from 62 in the 1990s to 43 in the first years of the second millenium.

We can't all be farmers

AN important land study warns the government against setting up poor blacks in South Africa for failure in the farming sector. The report, by the Johannesburg-based Centre for Development & Enterprise (CDE), says the hard truth is that agriculture offers few opportunities for solving unemployment, poverty or inequality on a significant scale, and provides an economic future for fewer and fewer people.

The CDE report, according to the Mail & Guardian, says that because of the extreme competitive pressures in agriculture, “the sector cannot be transformed into a large-scale anti-poverty relief mechanism.” It quotes bankers as saying there is no longer room for the average commercial farmer in SA. Even experienced white South Africans were moving out of farming because of the difficulties of making a living.

A national survey commissioned by CDE shows that only 9% of black people who are currently not farmers have farming aspirations. Other surveys suggest that only 15% of farm workers aspire to farm on their own or full-time. Land reform lobby groups should realise that blacks mostly want land in urban and peri-urban areas, says the CDE.

However, no mention is made of the draconian laws and taxes imposed on white commercial farmers by the ANC regime, making it near to impossible to conduct a normal-sized commercial farming operation. Who will produce the country’s food? Giant foreign-owned combines, such as those looting the forests of South America and SE Asia? Or rich forested land containing centuries-old trees – such as that bought and donated some years ago to South American Indians by pop-star Sting; which the Indians promptly sold to multi-nationals and proceeded to spend the profits on gambling, drink and drugs?

SA history in a nutshell

“SOUTH Africa” is 95 years old. Before that it was four separate territories [the Cape Colony, Natal Colony, the Orange Free State, and the Suid-Afrikaanse Republiek or Transvaal]. Before that it was the Cape Colony. Before that it was De Kaapsche Vlek (hamlet). Before that the whole 1¼-million square kilometres plus the rest was over tens of millennia a wasteland sparsely populated by Hottentots and Bushmen and on its eastern side a few Negroid peoples [clans].

Our oldest heritage is the so-called Company’s Garden, though “The Company” [Dutch East India Company] has been defunct for over 200 years, and which since 1892 has belonged to the people of Cape Town. Our next-oldest heritage is The Castle.

Ralph Pentecost Info-Letter, Cape Town

Freedom-and-democracy comes to the Dora Nginza Hospital

A 30-year-old Coloured woman from Humansdorp, Nicky van Willen, died early in November in a Port Elizabeth hospital from neglect.

Suffering from pneumonia, but with no facilities available to treat her at Humansdorp Hospital, she was sent to a Port Elizabeth hospital.

Her family received an urgent cry for help from her on her cell phone, with the word “Breath!”, then a while later an SMS called on her family to “Come quickly!” When they arrived at the hospital, they found Van Willen alone in a hospital ward with no staff on the whole floor. She had died of suffocation. Knocking on the locked door of the staff room, it was apparent that they had woken the nursing staff up because the nurses who eventually opened it were still buttoning up their uniforms.

The hospital authorities complained that there was a 40% shortage of nurses at all three hospitals in their group. On October 8th, state authorities admitted that SA was experiencing a shortage of 20,000 nurses, and 4,000 doctors.

The Minister of Health criticized the conditions in state hospitals, and indicated that she herself would be hesitant to receive treatment there. But how many others not privileged to use private hospitals, have died from neglect in state hospitals?

robi, has become a haven for street thieves and muggers. Some 56% of the population lives below the poverty level. Malaria, which could be as treatable as a strep-throat, kills one in five children every year because the government grossly shortchanges its public health system. All in all, it is a classic case of how African governments squander foreign aid.

Editorial in The Times, London

AFRICA

Treating Africa with kid gloves

IN dealing with the Katrina debacle, The Spectator in Britain asked: "What's wrong with America?", and the New Statesman printed an article entitled "Why America can't cope". The wave of sharp criticism of the Bush administration underscores the fact that nowadays in the civilised world, governments are expected to provide rapid and efficient action in the face of disasters, economic and humanitarian. Whenever the Bush government takes apparently wrong steps, it is mercilessly criticized.

The question is: Why is this norm not also applied to governments in Africa? Why are African leaders treated differently when they create man-made disasters – such as widespread corruption, unemployment, poverty and hunger?

This subject is hardly ever discussed, and it seems almost as if a tacit agreement exists within the great media houses to deal with African states and government leaders with a softer touch. Africa's problems are interpreted in an abstract manner, almost as if they had complex metaphysical origins in the distant past like "colonial repression". According to them, Africa must be allowed an undetermined period to learn how to govern and improve, with more and more development aid ploughed in. They must be allowed happily to continue for further decades to experiment calamitously with their new freedom, the fallout being dictatorships, limitless corruption, and poverty. Above all, Africa must never be judged by the same standards as Western countries.

One wishes President Bush everything he deserves, but why are African leaders not also hounded when they govern badly, unethically or undemocratically? Why is there not also intense debate about the "tragedy of Africa"? There ought to be forceful questions asked such as "What's wrong with Africa?" or "Why can't Africa cope?" It is only the rare, brave journalist inside the establishment media who asks such questions. George Bush's ineffectual handling of the New Orleans situation landed him in a dire crisis within a few short days. Why, then, is the regime in South Africa not similarly raked over the coals about the rising crime rate in the country, the all-encompassing unemployment, and the collapse of all standards of good government? Why are the big media houses still satisfied with the "process of transformation", and SA held up as a model of peace?

At least we can learn from Katrina that unexpected events of whatever kind can drastically change the political situation. Seen in human terms, the political world is extremely fluid. One can but hope that matters in Africa will soon lead to governments on our continent being measured by stricter standards.

MEINHARD PETERS in
Die Afrikaner, Pretoria

Incapable of solving problems

KENYA [after independence] has never seemed to live up to the potential of its rich farmland and beautiful valleys. Its government is corrupt. Its capital, Nai-

IT is surprising that white Africans have not learned what Africa has to teach: that Might makes Right, and no words can substitute for Power. This is true throughout the world, but it is most obvious in Africa, where even the very slow-witted should perceive this reality – unless they are blinded by wishful thinking. Before Ian Smith's sellout of Rhodesia, whites there babbled about "power-sharing". I don't know who cooked that oxymoron up, because in reality shared power means lost power.

ORION

NEWS IN BRIEF

German elections

INSTEAD of the 7-10% election majority the polls projected, Angela Merkel's CDU (Conservative) party received only a paper-thin majority: 35% as opposed to Gerhard Schroeder's SPD's 34%.

The voters punished Schroeder for the spiralling jobless rate. And the writing was on the wall when his Socialist SPD was booted out of office in North Rhine-Westfalia and Saxony earlier in the year. In a sense, the SPD's defeat was made even more bitter by the fact that 600,000 Turks had been given German passports recently by Schroeder (presumably in exchange for their votes), but even this didn't give him a majority in parliament. In Berlin there are already more Turks than Germans. A Turkish spokesman said before the election, "We [Turks] are on the way to Europe!" Schroeder's greatest triumph was seen to be his refusal to support America's invasion of Iraq.

Chancellor Merkel's CDU has been obliged to form an uneasy governing alliance with the SPD, 8 ministers from each party. Although Schroeder himself will not be part of the alliance, the SPD has got the Foreign, Finance, Justice and Labour portfolios.

Merkel, a Protestant, is from the former DDR, has degrees in physics and mathematics, speaks Russian fluently, and was a protege of ex-Chancellor Helmut Kohl. She is said to look to America for support and to the mainly Jewish-controlled media in Germany. She has stated that her first foreign priority is support of Israel, and has promised that country two more atomic-powered submarines. She is hostile to Turkish membership of the EU, of which Germany is the greatest financial sponsor.

Her party's position, with its tiny majority, is described as "walking on ice", especially as she will have to make good on her commitment to overhaul Germany's welfare system and labour market.

Blair's days numbered?

IN a humiliating defeat for Britain's

(above) ANGELA MERKEL, new German Chancellor. (Below) GERHARD SCHROEDER

Prime Minister, parliament rejected a proposal that in the future the police could hold alleged terrorists for 90 days instead of the present 28 days. 49 Labour rebels (including former cabinet members Clare Short and Frank Dobson), together with the Opposition parties gave the Blair proposal a thumbs-down by a majority of 31 votes. This was Blair's first defeat in parliament, and the greatest defeat that a British government has suffered in 26 years. The Labour Party still has a majority of 67 seats in parliament.

A further reverse for Blair was when a working group of the government found in a Inquiry that "the British foreign policy had played a great role in stimulating Islamic extremism."

*The irony of this move is that, during SA's counter-terrorism battle, it was our measure to hold suspected terrorists for 90 days which was so savagely attacked in Britain as a 'fascist' measure of the Old SA.

Blair's Weakness

TONY Blair repeatedly failed to use his influence to talk George Bush out of going to war in Iraq, according to an insider's memoirs, a devastating account published on 7th November.

An explosive record of the secret diplomacy between Washington and London in the run-up to the March 2003 invasion says Blair allowed himself to be 'taken for granted' by the White House. Sir Christopher Meyer, Britain's ambassador to the U.S. at the time, paints a portrait of a hesitant Premier who – at critical moments – failed to speak up against the rush to war.

He claims that even as late as January 2003, the White House could have been persuaded by Downing Street to let the U.N. have the final say on an invasion that has left Iraq in turmoil. The memoirs provide the first authoritative assessment of Blair's war diplomacy from someone who participated in the crucial negotiations leading up to the conflict. The failure to find any weapons of mass destruction was 'hugely embarrassing' for Blair.

Sir Christopher says the allied strategy, and in particular the failure to agree on a plan for the occupation once Saddam was deposed, was 'terribly flawed both in conception and execution'. Blair failed to make it plain to Bush that British support for the war (Britain being 'the only ally that mattered') was conditional on a U.N. consensus on finding Iraq's WMDs, progress in the Israel/Palestine conflict, and the backing of an international coalition.

Excerpts from London Daily Mail

War Crimes Charges

LAWYERS acting for anti-war groups recently presented the international criminal court with evidence which, they say, the Blair government acted unlawfully by participating in the U.S.-led invasion of Iraq.

The submissions to the International Court of Justice (ICC), which is based in The Hague, have been drawn up by Public Interest Lawyers, a Birmingham-based firm which is representing the "Stop the War Coalition", "Peacerights" (a non-government organization set up to promote peaceful conflict resolution), "Military Families Against the War", and relatives of Iraqi civilians allegedly injured or killed by British troops.

The attorney-general, Lord Goldsmith, warned Tony Blair on March 7th, 2003 – less than two weeks before the invasion – that "given the controversy surrounding the legal basis for action, it is likely that the international criminal court will scrutinize any allegations of war crimes by UK forces very closely."

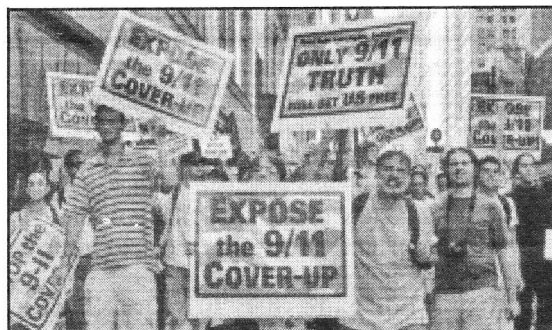

9/11 revisited

A new book by Professor David Griffin is entitled "The 9/11 Commission Report – Omissions and Distortions". Among the revelations is included a statement by U.S. Attorney David Schippers, the Chief Investigative Council for the House Judiciary Committee in 1998, that the FBI had advised Schippers six weeks prior to 9/11 about attacks planned for lower Manhattan.

Schippers stated that the information was highly specific, including dates, targets, even the funding sources of the terrorists. Schippers stated that the FBI field agents told him that their investigation had been terminated by FBI headquarters, and they were furthermore threatened with

DAVID SCHIPPERS

(above) Newsday, New York

(below) From the impeachbush.org website huge demo.

Bush in trouble

prosecution if they went public with the information.

Schippers then reported that six weeks prior to 9/11, he had tried to warn Attorney General Ashcroft about the threatened attacks, but that Ashcroft refused to return his calls. Griffin points out that it was impossible to assume that Ashcroft did not know Attorney Schippers's respected position in Republican circles and his association with the prosecution of Bill Clinton. Therefore, as Griffin pointed out in a speech at the University of Wisconsin, "This would be treason."

So here we have the first book publishing an accusation of treason against the Attorney General of the United States; which, if accepted, must also be carried to the next higher level, to the Vice President and the President's offices as well.

"The 9/11 Commission Report – Omissions & Distortions" is available from Criminal Politics Magazine, PO Box 37432 Cincinnati OH 45222, USA

Swiss election news

THE new Party of Nationally Orientated Swiss (PNOS) has seen its second local government representative elected in only its fourth outing at the polls, reflecting a swing towards nationalist and right-wing populist parties in that country.

Dominic Bannholzer, just 19 years old, was elected to the municipal council of the town of Günsberg with 20% of the vote. The PNOS is firmly opposed to non-white aliens in Switzerland. The chief ideologist of the party, Bernhard Schaub, said at a rally in May, that "immigrants of alien races" should leave Switzerland immediately.

The SVP, Christoph Bloch's right-wing populist party, won the biggest share of the vote in the last Swiss parliamentary elections, winning 55 of the 200 seats in the Swiss parliament, with 27% of the vote.

Zundel trial

FIVE separate days in November have been set aside for the Mannheim trial of Ernst Zundel. But enough has been written about the absurdity of Section 130 of the German Penal Code under which he will be prosecuted. Any mounted defence by the Zundel legal team will be used as evidence [against him] and thereby, in the eyes of the judge, compound Zundel's guilt – something that is already established by the fact that he is before the court.

The presumption of innocence is not a legal principle operating in Germany. The judge faces an easy task because guilt is an accepted fact, and the only matter he has to decide is whether the court should extend mercy to Zundel. This is because truth is not a defence in these proceedings.

Though there will be much talk that the inquisitorial system – wherein the judge is fully involved in the legal process – is designed to elicit the truth of a matter, the principle of judicial notice will be applied and new evidence rejected; then used to prove that Zundel is full of ‘criminal energy’. Because he has shown no remorse, this compounds his own inevitable guilt. He could face five years of prison. It is obvious that the Zundel trial is significant for world politics.

Adelaide Institute Newsletter, Australia

Views on the Euro

AT the start of 2002, when Italy enthusiastically embraced the single Euro currency, Minister of Welfare Roberto Calderoli’s views would have been seen as heresy.

Yet at the Campo de’ Fiori market a few streets away – where the monk Giordano Bruno was burned at the stake in 1600 for contending that the universe had no centre – hatred of the euro is a new orthodoxy.

Markets are half empty. A marketer says “Since the euro everything is much harder. Prices have doubled. The euro was supposed to bring security, but we cannot live like this.”

Calderoli’s Northern League, a rightwing party holding the balance of power in Silvio Berlusconi’s ruling coalition, is championing the euro’s abandonment.

With Italy the weakest link in a chronically under-performing eurozone, economists have begun to suggest scenarios in which Italy would either leave the currency voluntarily or act in such a way as to destabilise it and hasten its collapse.

Weekly Telegraph, London

(Continued from page 1)

EUROPE ON HIGH ALERT

Immigrant Insurrection in France

... national crisis.

Extreme violent disorder spread to cities such as Toulouse, Lille, Nantes, Evreux in Normandy, and even to the centre of Paris. More than four thousand cars were set on fire and [3,000] people arrested across France. The rioters torched post offices, fire stations, schools and synagogues, buses and warehouses; fired upon police; and doused a handicapped woman with petrol and set her alight.

Nicolas Sarkozy, the tough-minded interior minister, was blamed for inflaming the situation by his uncompromising language [and for demanding stern punishment for wrong-doers]. French policy in general has been blamed for herding “poor” Moslems into suburban ghettos where they have been “left to fester in high unemployment and poverty”.

The disturbances are thus being portrayed as race riots caused by official discrimination and insensitivity. But, in fact, the situation is far more profound and intractable.

Intifada

What we are seeing, in effect, is a French intifada [Holy War]: an uprising by French Moslems against the state. When the police tried to take back the streets, they were driven out with the demand that they leave what the protesters called ‘occupied territories’.

Far from the claim that the disturbances have been caused by a French policy of segregating Moslems into ghettos, this is a war being waged for separate development. Some Moslems have even called for the introduction of the ancient Ottoman millet system of autonomous development for different communities. The director of the Great Mosque of Paris, Dalil Boubakeur, has suggested that France should enter into an agreement with its Moslems to grant them autonomy within the state [i.e. an ethno-state].

Crisis started years ago

This crisis, however, did not start with the electrocution of the two youths in the Paris suburb. It has been going on for decades, on an astonishing scale: Nine thousand police cars have been torched or stoned since the beginning of this year. The problem has not been M. Sarkozy’s tough approach. On the contrary, until now this permanent insurrection has simply been ignored.

For more than 20 years, France’s Moslem areas have been out of control. Indeed, they only turned into ghettos in the first place because Moslem violence and harassment forced everyone else out. And they became no-go areas for the police, seen by the Moslems as occupation forces entering their territory.

In schools in such areas, teachers trying to teach French or European history have been threatened by both pupils and their parents. In some cases, young French people have converted to Islam just to escape the harassment.

Blaming an official policy of segregation is wide of the mark. The fact is that French Moslems want to be segregated. The ghettos are a way of ensuring a separate Islamic existence without having to assimilate into French society.

Problem not solved

Whatever policies different European countries have pursued to deal with minorities, they have not cracked this problem. France has enforced a rigid policy of state secularism. The British and other Europeans have adopted multiculturalism, which means giving minorities equal status. Yet while France was burning, there were riots over several days in Denmark. In the super-tolerant Netherlands, the filmmaker Theo van Gogh was murdered exactly a year ago because he made an ‘insulting’ film about Islam. The Dutch immigration minister has had to wear a bullet-proof vest after shots were fired into her office. Death threats have been made against other ministers who have spoken against Islamist violence.

Last July, British Moslems turned themselves into human bombs [in London]. We are told this was because of the war in Iraq. But France was a principal opponent of that war and yet it is now being torched from Normandy to the Mediterranean. For every country, a different reason can be found to blame it for the attacks. Yet the common factor is the hostility of Moslems to the countries in which they have settled. Moderate Moslems are unable to stop those who want to impose their values on the majority.

Official agreements

And European governments have played into their hands. As the writer Bat Ye’Or revealed in her book “Eurabia”, the Arab League and EU governments entered into a series of official agreements some 30 years ago guaranteeing that Moslem immigrants in Europe would not be compelled to adapt in any way ‘to the customs of the host countries’.

This is all bound up with the erosion of national identity across Europe. This has affected even France, once a ferocious proponent of French culture ...

Even now, Britain, France and the rest of Europe are still in varying stages of denial over Moslem unrest. Reluctant even to admit that religion is central to this phenomenon, they look instead for ways to blame themselves.

The warning for us from the disturbing events in France could not be clearer. We must end the ruinous doctrine of multiculturalism and re-assert [our own] identity and values. But if France fails to hold the line, the fall-out will be incalculable for us and for all of Europe.

MELANIE PHILLIPS in London Daily Mail (7/11/05)

Q: If the unemployment rate of Moslems in the ghettos of France is 20% higher than the national average, why do they not go back to their own countries and be unemployed at home instead?

A: The first reason is that France gives generous state social security to the unemployed which their home countries do not. Secondly, some Moslem councils are deliberately persuading their flocks to remain in European countries as occupants.

Strategy for rule of Islam in Europe

THE London bombings and other acts of Moslem terrorism in Western Europe gave me cause to reflect on the growing population of Moslems here in New Zealand.

An article headed "The Islamisation of Europe" was written by Dr Patrick Sookhdeo, who is director of the Institute for the Study of Islam and Christianity, the research arm of the Christian aid agency, Barnabas Fund, based in Pewsey, Wiltshire, England.

According to Sookhdeo, Europe is undergoing a process of rapid change as Moslems make their presence felt in politics, economics, law, education, and the media. Europe, he says, is being transformed into a society in which Islam takes its place not just as an equal with the many other faith communities but often as the dominant player.

It is not happening by chance but is the result of a careful and deliberate strategy by certain Moslem leaders which was planned in 1980 when the Islamic Council of Europe published a book called "Moslem Communities in Non-Moslem States" which clearly explained the Islamic agency in Europe.

The instructions given in the book told Moslems to get together and organise themselves into viable Moslem communities based on Islamic principles. This was the duty of every individual Moslem living in a non-Moslem country. They should set up mosques, community centres and schools. At all costs they must avoid being assimilated by the majority [Europeans], and to resist assimilation they must group themselves geographically, forming areas of high Moslem concentration [ghettos] within the population as a whole. But they must also interact with non-Moslems so as to share the message of Islam with them.

The ultimate goal was for Moslems to become the majority and the entire nation be governed according to Islam.

Dr Sookhdeo admits that not all Moslems support this action plan. Even among those who agree on the ultimate goal of creating an Islamic state, there are differences over whether it should be a slow and peaceful transition or hastened by means of political dominance or even by violence.

But, he says, it is not difficult to recognise the different stages of the Islamic Council of Europe's strategy being put into practice in Europe.

Saudi Arabian funding has paid to build large mosques staffed by imams brought to Europe from the 'home countries'.

He says that in Britain, where Islam has made its most rapid advance, Islamic law (sharia) is practised unofficially, with sharia councils and courts giving judgments on Moslem family matters.

Halal meat is now routinely served in many British prisons, schools and hospitals, sometimes to Moslem and non-Moslem alike, and the hijab (Islamic headscarf) is worn in British schools, where numerous concessions are made to British Moslems. Islam is often given more prominence and respect than other faiths at state schools. And in the London borough of Tower Hamlets Moslems have forced name changes for districts and local amenities if the existing name sounded too Christian for their liking.

The ultimate goal of taking control of society, as depicted by the Islamic Council of Europe in 1980, has clearly been in the minds of at least some Moslem leaders.

London has become one of the most important bases for Islamic terrorism worldwide, which was illustrated by the July bombings in London itself.

Yet despite all these advances, Moslems still tend to portray themselves as victims in European society, while the majority society in turn struggles to avoid giving any accidental offence. Dr Sookhdeo says that at a political level, European countries are responding in different ways to the challenge of Islam.

France is determinedly protecting its secularism and has banned the hijab in schools. The Netherlands has lately swung from one extreme to the other, following the ritualised killing of Dutch film director Theo van Gogh by a Moslem in November last year. The Dutch are turning against multiculturalism and becoming concerned to control immigration. Britain seems to be trying to replicate the segregation and communalism of the British Raj in India, whereby the various religious communities were each given their own laws, a policy that would certainly mesh well with some Moslem leaders' plans for Britain.

Even with an estimated 20-million living in the European Union, Moslems are still a minority in numerical terms. No country, apart from Albania, has a Moslem community amounting to more than about 10% of the population, he says.

However, demographic studies indicate that Moslem populations are growing far faster than the non-Moslem populations, partly through continued immigration and conversion, but mainly because of the larger number of children that Moslem families typically have.

There's much more to what Dr Sookhdeo has to say, but that's the guts of it.

GARTH GEORGE in

New Zealand Herald, Auckland NZ

Camp of the Saints

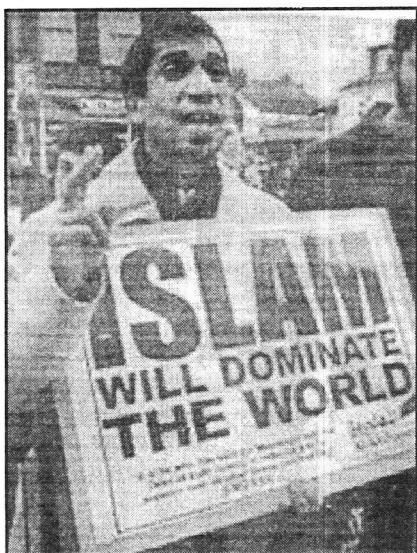

NOVELIST Jean Raspail foresaw that the demographic collapse of Europe would lead to violence, and that the burgeoning populations of north and west Africa would conquer France. Current news from France indicates that this conquest is in process.

Well-known British columnist Mark Steyn of the Spectator draws a parallel with what happened in Poitiers in 732 A.D. By October of that year, the Moslems had penetrated 1600 km north of Gibraltar, right up to the banks of the Loire and only 300 km from the gates of Paris. Between Poitiers and Tours the Moorish invading forces under the command of General Abd al-Raman, met the Frankish powers under Charles Martel.

The Franks were unflinching in their resistance. Abd al-Raman was killed and the southern border of France was secured. The Battle of Poitiers – like Thermopylae in 480 B.C. (when Leonidas's Gideons stopped the Persians) – is regarded as a pivotal event in the survival of Western Christian civilization.

The present conflagration in France represents nothing less than a Moslem insurrection against a Western government. For years, respected intellectuals and commentators have warned against the danger of the enormous Moslem population (more than 5 million in France) held for Europe. In one week (11-17 November), 4300 vehicles were burnt out in France. Whites were assaulted and one killed.

The "French intifada", as it is called, has sent a seismic shock throughout Europe, felt throughout the world. As

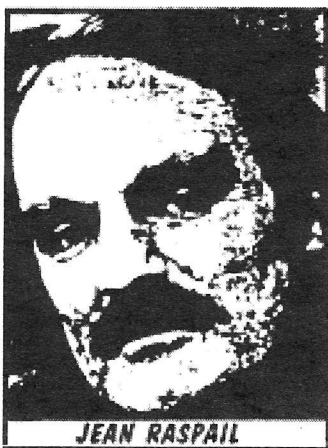

Seen on a British street

Theodore Dalrymple of the London City Journal commented recently, with the London bombs the beautiful dream of universal cultural kinship has been replaced by a nightmare of permanent conflict. 1400 municipal regions in France are effectively under Moslem control, where the French police no longer dare enter. Parts of French territory are thus already occupied by Islamic powers.

The process of [intellectual and emotional] undermining, reminds one of the South African situation over the past decades: Just as whites were blamed for the Soweto uprising, for example, so leftist academics in France blame the French for "exclusion" and "racism". The value of white guilt is understood only too well by the blacks and Arabs as an excuse for destroying motors, schools and shopping malls.

Excerpts from article by DAN ROODT in Die Afrikaner, Pretoria

DRAWING OF JEAN RASPAIL

JEAN RASPAIL

NOT SCIENCE FICTION

WHEN "The Camp of the Saints" was first published in the 1970s, Jean Raspail – who was to become one of France's best novelists – was regarded by many of his readers as a science-fiction writer. Albeit that he was already known for his keen political and anthropo-sociological analyses of small coloured communities from the Caribbean and the Amerindian regions.

So the background of this rugged intellectual brought him to consider the future of European societies with the same pessimistic view he had when he denounced the destruction of the very non-European communities who later, on board of old rusty tubs, would try to reach what their repressed memories from old colonial days seemed to tell them were the promised lands of all humanity ... In fact, it was not science-fiction at all. It was stark reality ...

Excerpted from article by GILBERT MONCHANIN in Impact (Nov/Dec 2001/Jan 2002)

RUSHING TOWARD THE ABYSS

La Colonisation de l'Europe: Discours vrai sur l'immigration et l'Islam by GUILLAUME FAYE (Ed. L'Aencre, Paris. ISBN 2-911202-30-9)

THE following summary of the contents of Guillaume Faye's prophetic book (which was published five years ago) was printed in the Oct/Nov 2002 issue of Impact. Because of the violent events that have recently taken place in France and neighbouring European countries, we believe that a reprint of that summary could be illuminating.

GUILLIAM FAYE, a prominent and respected historian and former self-confessed conservative-liberal, now appeals to French youth to "remember Poitiers" (where Charles Martel defeated Arab invaders), and El Cid (who defeated the Moors in 15th century Spain). He talks of at least 7 or 8 million Moslems in France – but there are possibly twice that number. Naturalised Moslems are called French and are not classified as aliens.

In this shocking and hard-hitting book (published in 2000), Faye shows that we should speak of colonisation on a massive scale rather than "immigration" by peoples from Africa, the Maghreb and Asia; that Islam is undertaking the conquest of France and Europe; that "delinquency by the youth" is in fact the start of an ethnic civil war; that France is being invaded as much via the womb as by its porous frontiers; that for reasons of birthrate, an Islamic Power will establish itself in France – first at the municipal level and then, perhaps, at the national level.

French state schools are collapsing, overwhelmed by the violence of coloureds and blacks in particular, the New Conquerors. There are more than 1000 lawless zones. Over the past few years there has been an explosion of immigrants, either legally supplied with visas, or illicit. The new arrivals are no longer workers earning their way, but candidates for handouts. France is rushing toward the abyss: if things do not change, within two generations France will, for the first time in her history, no longer be a predominantly European country. Germany, Italy, Spain, Belgium and Holland are travelling on the same fatal road, with only a few years' delay.

Europe has not faced such an historical crisis since the fall of the Roman Empire. This cataclysm is taking place with the complicity of a political leadership blinded by ethno-masochism, or with the criminal complicity of the immigration lobbies.

Faye believes that the increasing ethnic chaos in Europe could destroy our civilisation: it is more serious than all the great plagues and wars that have ever afflicted Europe. The author also shows that the twin processes of colonisation and swamping by Islam serves the interests of the USA. For the first time, an author dares to reveal everything about this most sacred taboo. He exposes the real figures, the true facts, and the murky background of a gigantic plot against France and Europe.

He explains not only the how but the why of the disaster and of the blindness of the leadership elite. In his opinion, integration by assimilation is just as impossible as the concept of a multi-ethnic community. He suggests that we should seriously prepare for another solution: the reconquista.

The reconquista was the name given to the expulsion of the Moslem Moors from Spain in 1494/5 by Isabella of Castille, the Plantagenet monarch who ruled Spain with Ferdinand.

Faye, who dedicated his book to Europe's youth, was formerly a member of the movement Nouvelle Ecole, but their ways parted over the immigration issue.

A list of the chapter names and sub-names in themselves reveal the depth of Faye's research, of which the following notes are but a brief foretaste:

*The mechanism of colonisation and submersion by the womb, including the swindle of illegitimate legitimacy; ethnic guerrilla warfare and the expulsion of whites from their territory.

*Europe asleep – demographic and geopolitical threat from North Africa.

*A multi-ethnic community is pure fantasy.

*Islam is determined to conquer Europe – the jihad (Holy War) as a categorical imperative.

*From delinquency to ethnic civil war – tension as a strategy; delinquency is not spontaneous.

*Immigration is destroying France's schools – social disintegration.

*The question of race and tribe – moving toward apartheid? The basis of civilisation is anthropological and biological; return to reality, good sense, and to the life force.

*Taboos and lies – false concepts about immigration and Islam. "Cultures" of other races are given an inflated value. Humanitarianism (as opposed to classical humanism) is a fake. Love of one's own is the way ahead.

*What solutions? Solutions which are impracticable and too late. Need for a major crisis. Possible scenarios including that of the Reconquista.

Conclusion: Appeal to the youth of Europe; the inspiration of El Cid (the hero of the war against Islam during Isabella's reign).

LOOKING AT THE MIDDLE EAST

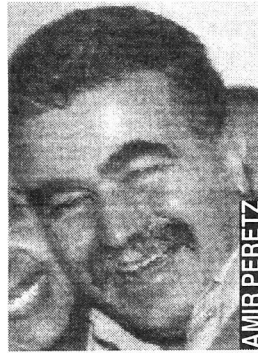

Loyal puppet

WHAT is never discussed in the media is that Washington had a loyal puppet in the person of Saddam Hussein, but it chose to betray him after his attack on Iran failed. The Shah's Iran, of course, was a puppet regime set up originally by the British. The intrigue is quite complex, and obviously the Israel lobby is part of the picture, but all we are allowed to hear is a lot of inane rhetoric about "democracy". This isn't even a respectable lie; it's all empty babble.

Critical Factors, USA

NOW that the Taliban has been destroyed by American forces in Afghanistan, the poppy fields in that country are once again flourishing.

Denis Doyle, a former chief of the Drug Enforcement Administration declared: "In my 50-year history in the DEA and related agencies, the majority targets of my investigations almost invariably turned out to be working for the CIA."

AMIR PERETZ

on November 10th, and replaced him with union leader Amir Peretz (53).

The new leader Peretz, who is fairly unknown in international political circles, is determined to withdraw from Ariel Sharon's governing coalition, and is strongly supported in his goal to return to Labour's socialistic roots. He is seeking an early general election.

His predecessor, 82-year-old Shimon Peres, won the Nobel Peace Prize, and served for two terms as prime minister, once being after the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin. Peres was one of the foremost supporters of peace with the Palestinians, and his sudden removal will inevitably impact on further peace negotiations. [Jewish historians tell us there is a great difference between the Sephardim (Western Jews) and the Ashkenazim (Eastern Jews). If this is correct, and we are to judge the differences between Shimon Peres and Amir Peretz, this political shift would appear to be a victory for Eastern Jews.]

Ariel Sharon has been dependent on the support of the Labour Party to ward off a motion of no confidence. His Likud party is under pressure as a result of Israel's withdrawal from the Gaza Strip. It was not a total surprise, therefore, when Sharon resigned from the ruling Likud on 20th November to form his own centrist party. Waiting in the wings was extremist Benjamin Netanyahu, one-time prime minister of Israel, whose leadership of Likud would have de-stabilized Palestine even further. However, Silvan Shalom is to take over Likud leadership.

I'VE often pointed to Israel as an example of the futility of trying to shoot or bomb your way out of a terrorist problem. No nation on Earth has been more ruthless, more determined, and more effective in fighting terrorists than Israel, yet after more than 50 years, the Israelis are still plagued by it. That's because they have refused to solve the political problem.

CHARLEY REESE, antiwar.com

Iran warns Israel against attacking nuclear sites

THE Speaker of the Iranian parliament warned Israel against any attempt to attack its nuclear facilities. "If Israel does something stupid and attacks our nuclear facilities like it did in Iraq, we promise to teach it a lesson it will never forget," said Gholam Ali Hadad-Adel. He was referring to the 1981 strike by Israel against the Osiraq nuclear reactor in Iraq. "We will not give in," Adel said, citing the right of all countries to use nuclear energy for civilian energy purposes under the Non-Proliferation Treaty. In an escalating crisis over Iran's nuclear ambitions, Tehran has rejected demands that it abandon fuel cycle technology in return for certain incentives, and has resumed uranium conversion work in defiance of a suspended agreement with Britain, France and Germany.

yahoo.com

New Labour leader in Israel

ISRAEL'S Labour Party ousted its leader, Shimon Peres, in an unexpected move

FAR AND WIDE

Crisis in European Union

IN defiance of a united media, a monolithically pro-Brussels political class and blizzards of propaganda, the French said a resounding Non to the Euro elites. It's hard to think of a graver crisis of legitimacy for the EU, if even France, Europe's most loyal daughter, wants no more of the racket. As Oui campaigners kept insisting, a Non vote would be a rejection of the entire project. Tout à fait.

So let us now see whether they will abide by their own logic. Will they scrap those parts of the constitution that have already been implemented in anticipation of the referendums, notably the creation of an EU foreign ministry, the harmonisation of criminal justice and the incorporation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights? Will they roll back the frontiers of Brussels, allowing the nation states to assume control once more over domestic matters? Will they repatriate agriculture, fisheries, energy policy, asylum and immigration, transport, employment law? But Brussels has invested too much in this process to allow a little thing like a referendum result to halt it.

This is not the first time they have had to deal with rejection in a national referendum. Almost every Euro-poll produced a No vote, whether in Ireland, Sweden or Denmark. By any normal measure, the EU has lost the confidence of its citizens. But the project was never meant to be democratic. From the first, the EU's founders understood that it needed to be immune to public opinion. A system was designed in which supreme power was wielded by unelected officials, and in which the peoples were presented with a series of faits accom-

lis. When in 1992 they got their first No vote in Denmark's referendum on Maastricht, our masters pushed on regardless.

[But] if they force the French to vote again, the resulting public anger will be terrible to behold. Whatever part of No don't they understand?

* * *

IT is obvious to all but the most deluded that the EU Treaty is dead. To breathe life into it would be the most remarkable act of its kind since Lazarus yawned and stretched. Europe's heads of governments and senior bureaucrats are gathered around the corpse like embarrassed coroners, shuffling their feet and nudging one another, each of them reluctant to sign the death certificate. The first one to use the word mort is the loser.

It is true that there were radical differences between the No votes in France and the Netherlands. But the two referenda had more in common than has been acknowledged: both were sharp, popular responses to perceived forces of intrusive change. In France, the Treaty stood proxy for the globalisation and liberalism that the French believe to be plundering their economy. In the Netherlands the voters protested at the EU's supposed threat to Holland's culture and social liberalism, and at the fleecing of the Dutch taxpayer by the remote bureaucracy of Brussels. If a referendum had been fought in Britain, you can be sure that immigration and the power of distant European courts would have been at the forefront of a No campaign.

This pan-European uprising may be fragmentary in its forms. But it is a movement all the same, and it has a single set of roots: disenchantment with political institutions and elites is spreading like a furious virus across Europe and beyond.

MATTHEW d'ANCONA in the
Weekly Telegraph, London

New Zealand

NEW Zealand – as we know it – will not remain long in the First World. There is a wall and we will hit it. The only question is when. Certain real facts make the collision inevitable.

The first is the continuing transformation of wants into needs. The second is the exponential rise in the cost of providing those 'needs' for the public. And the third is that New Zealand is a city trapped in a country's body. (JIM HOPKINS)

Our population is becoming less white. By 2050, 57% of all New Zealand children will be Maori or Pacific Island, and up to 68% will be non-European.

Some may argue that the increasing homogenisation of Western cultures is a desirable outcome, a unifying force in these divisive times when diversity and multiculturalism seem to engender so much fear and distrust.

But there are those who see a danger in our adoption of the American approach to business and social issues. William Hutton of the Work Foundation in Britain has argued that globalisation has become a cloak for the export of the American business model as the benchmark by which all countries must judge the success of their approach to capitalism and society. (TAPU MISA)

[In the September elections in NZ] the National Party made one of its two main selling points the rollback of Maori rights, which it called 'separatism'. It did this in response to wide unease in the country about the concession of rights to Maoris over the past 20 years. Maoris number now a quarter of those aged under 15.

Biculturalism is not just about song and dance, but about rights and power. Governments [noticeably Labour] have intervened with programmes to reduce disparities in life chances. But still Maoris are more likely to be ill-educated, ill-paid. Put cultural pride and material inequality together and you get ethnic politics, which is difficult to manage and potentially explosive.

As the huge provincial swing against Labour may have reflected, a large swathe of the public is at odds with what it sees as Labour's 'political correctness' including on Maori rights. [COLIN JAMES]

NZ Herald, Auckland NZ

An irresistible current?

AMERICA is hollowing out, I tell you. Fast. It's societal and cultural gangrene by national choice. The Soviet Union collapsed from sheer bumbling foolishness. We're working on it.

I figure it must be a current ...

The schools here are feminized, psychologized, amphetamized, egalitized and therapeutized – and run by the government. They do everything they can to keep anyone else from opening a school

RULE by the underdog, whether he be such by reason of class or race, occurs as a result of revolution. Revolutionaries favour this element because what it may lack in intelligence, knowledge and ability, it makes up for in resentment, envy, the desire to destroy, the urge toward revenge, the wish to soil what is clean, and to dwarf whatever towers above the monotonous horizon of mediocrity ...

Possession of a first-class intellectual elite is of little use to a nation-state if that elite is alienated from its society and functions outside of it.

STEFAN POSSONY and NATHANIEL WEYL, The Geography of the Intellect

that might work. We're not illiterate despite the government, but because of it.

I don't think too many folk in the U.S. have figured out that America isn't the power that it was. The social situation is just as balled up as everything else. The country doesn't have cities any longer. It has enclaves of unassimilable Third Worlders who make up more than a quarter of the population, and growing. California is going back to Mexico. Miami might as well issue passports. Lots of cities have already gone back to Africa.

What proves that all of this is an irresistible current is that the white population is actually trying to become Third World. I mean, the reasonable thing would be to try to make the best of a losing situation – save money, learn to compete, teach everybody's kids, keep standards up, at least maintain a little self-respect. Nah. That would make sense. It looks like irresistible currents don't do sense.

FRED REED, in Nationalist Times, USA

China, today and yesterday

CHINA has six nuclear power plants, with nine generating sets in operation and two under construction. Nuclear power is the third most important method of electricity generation in China, following thermal power and hydropower. China relies on coal for 70% of its energy demands, but the recent economic boom has highlighted the risks of being overly dependent on one energy source.

The country plans to build 40 nuclear reactors within the next 15 years to achieve a new, increased target for generating capacity. From now until 2020, two to three 1,000-megawatt reactors will be put into commission every year, the China Daily says. "We are speeding up development of nuclear power," says the China Atomic Energy Authority. "Demand for the nuclear plants is outstripping supply, with leading energy companies identifying new sites in inland regions, despite the government-stated priority for power stations in coastal areas."

The above report comes from John Coleman's World in Review, USA, but no mention is made of where China and other major users of nuclear power intend to dispose of their waste products. Could the new scramble for Africa have something to do with the search for space to bury their nuclear waste?

An independent South African observer remarks that China sits with enormous problems. The question is: Will it follow the same path as the old Soviet Union, with a shattering of the state? The provinces in the west of China, which is also the largest region, want to break away. The Chinese are not a homogeneous group. The Ching dynasty (1644 - 1911) was not in fact Chinese at all, but Manchurian (with their pony tails and shaved heads). The communistic iron grip will eventually collapse as a result of economic development, and then China as we know it will break up.

IMPACT DECEMBER 2005/JANUARY 2006

Another problem facing them is poverty. The communists allow capitalism in only certain areas, like Shanghai, Beijing and Guangzhou. There the rich get richer and the poor in the country get poorer.

"U.S. President George W Bush is like a blind man in a room full of deaf people."

Former U.S. Treasury Secretary
PAULO'NEILL

MORE ABOUT KATRINA

Barbarians in New Orleans

By JARED TAYLOR

SINCE Katrina roared over the Southern states on the Gulf of Mexico, facts are still surfacing about looting and crime . . .

IN the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, which blasted the Gulf Coast on Aug. 29, the entire world saw images that left no doubt that what is repeatedly called the sole remaining super-power can be reduced to squalor and chaos nearly as gruesome as anything found in the Third World. The weather – a Category 4 hurricane – certainly had something to do with it, but the most serious damage was done not by nature but by man.

New Orleans very quickly collapsed into banditry. Looting began even while the storm was still blowing. At first there was sympathetic clucking about the need for food and medicine, but news clips of blacks wading happily through waist-deep water with television sets over their heads dispelled that view.

The day after the hurricane, a reporter caught the atmosphere of high-spirited chaos at a Wal-Mart in the Lower Garden District. One man packed his van so full of electronic equipment he could not close the rear doors. A teenage girl passed out, face down, and people stepped on her. A man stopped to roll her onto her back, and she vomited pink liquid, so he rolled her back on her stomach. An NBC correspondent filmed black uniformed police officers strolling through the aisles, filling shopping carts.

At one store, a policeman broke the glass on the DVD case so civilians would not cut themselves trying to break it, but one man was ungrateful. "The police got all the best stuff," he said. "They're crookeder than us." One woman stocking up on makeup was glad to see the officers. "It must be legal," she said. "The police are here taking stuff, too."

Violence of all kinds quickly spread through the paralysed city, where robbery, rape and even murder became routine. There were still thousands of people trapped on rooftops and in attics, but on Sept. 1, Mayor Ray Nagin called the entire police force off of rescue work and ordered it to secure the city. The response from the force? An estimated 200 officers just walked off the job. "They said that they had lost everything and didn't feel it was worth going back to take fire from looters and losing their lives," explained Henry Whitehorn, chief of the Louisiana State Police. Many disappeared without a word. Sheriff Harry Lee of Jefferson Parish in New Orleans also said his men were deserting.

Two police officers, including the department's official spokesman Paul Accardo, committed suicide. The London Times estimated that one in five officers refused to work.

"No one anticipated the disintegration of the police force in New Orleans," said Lieutenant General Steven Blum of the National Guard. He said the city was operating on only one third of its pre-storm strength of 1,500 officers, and that the Guard suddenly had to switch from rescue to law enforcement.

New Orleans has had only black mayors since 1978, and has spent decades making the police force as black as possible. It established a city residency requirement for officers to keep suburban whites from applying for jobs, and lowered recruitment standards so blacks could pass them. Katrina blew away any pretence that the force was competent.

On September 5, exactly a week after the hurricane, Mayor Ray Nagin offered to pay for the entire police force, firefighters, and city emergency workers to go on five-day vacations with their families to Las Vegas or some other destination. He said there were enough National Guard in the city to maintain order, and that his men "have been through a lot." He brushed off suggestions that this was dereliction of duty. He even asked the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) to pay for the vacations, but FEMA refused. "We haven't turned over control of the city," a city spokesman explained. "We're going to leave a skeleton force – about 20 percent of the department – for leadership and liaison with the troops while we get some rest."

Several days after the hurricane, with desperate people still huddled on roof tops, FEMA said it was too dangerous to attempt rescues.

Along one stretch of Highway 10, hundreds of volunteer firefighters, auxiliary coastguardmen and citizens with small boats were eager to reach people, but could not set out because of sniper fire. "We are trying to do our job here but we can't if they are shooting at us," explained Major Joey Broussard of the Louisiana State Fisheries and Wildlife division. "We don't want to get in a situation of having to return fire out there," he said.

Perhaps the most chilling accounts were from hospitals, where staff desperately tried to move patients upstairs as water rose, while blacks looted the floors below. Most hospitals had emergency generators, but these began to give out. Two days after the hurricane, the city had no running water, and as food ran out, doctors and nurses gave themselves intravenous feedings to keep going.

Just outside New Orleans, gunmen held up a supply truck carrying food, water, and medical supplies that were on their way to a 203-bed hospital. Patients all across the city eventually had to be taken out, but rescuers met resistance. Efforts to evacuate patients and staff from hospitals was stopped by sniper fire. Hospitals reported gangs of looters attacking and overturning ambulances.

The head of FEMA, said: "We are working under conditions of urban warfare." General Blum of the National Guard said half of the 7,000 guardsmen under his command had just returned from overseas assignments and were "highly proficient in the use of lethal force." He promised to deal with thugs "in a quick and efficient manner."

The London Times reported that a New Orleans policeman explained through tears that he had seen bodies riddled with bullets, and one man with the top of his head shot off. He said looters were armed with stolen AK-47 rifles, and that the police were outgunned just like in Somalia.

We will never know the full extent of the mayhem blacks loosed on their own city. Many victims will not be found for weeks or even months, rotted beyond recognition, their killers never found. Drowned or murdered, the bloated, stinking bodies that turn up by the hundreds will look much the same. In their haste to get cadavers off the streets, the authorities may not worry much about cause of death.

From hurricane to jungle

In the two main refugee centres, however – the Superdome and the Convention Centre – to many people witnessed the degeneracy for it to be ignored.

Whatever order had been established soon melted away, and the Stadium reverted to a jungle. Young men robbed and raped with impunity. Occasional gunshots panicked the crowd. At least one man committed suicide by throwing himself off a high deck and splattering onto the playing field. Bodies of the murdered, and of infants and the elderly who died of heat exhaustion began to accumulate. One man was beaten to death, and another was beaten with a pipe. Crack addicts – who had brought their most valuable possession with them – smoked openly and fought over drugs.

Australian tourists stuck in the Superdome had the same experience as the group of British students, but one of them took control, gathering tourists together for safety. They organized escorts for women who had to go to the toilet or for food, and set up a roster of men to stand guard while others slept. “We sat through the night just watching, not knowing if we would be alive in the morning”.

JARED TAYLOR,

American Renaissance, USA

THE Army Times USA, reported that Sgt. 1st Class Ron Dixon of the Oklahoma National Guard, who had recently come home from Afghanistan, said he was struck by the fact that Afghans wanted to help themselves, but that the people of New Orleans only wanted others to help them.

If you tolerate this . . .

THE aftermath of Katrina is proving every day that we need racial separation.

When law and order broke down on the Gulf Coast, we saw vast differences in the reactions of whites and blacks. A substantial portion of the black underclass behaved unbelievably callously and savagely – exhibiting behaviour on a large scale that is almost unknown among whites. Black men with guns raping women and little children, boys and girls, slitting throats and throwing the bodies in ankle-deep human waste – then going back for more. Black warlords firing on rescue workers and ordering elderly nursing-home residents out into the floods so they could steal their food and look for drugs ... What this means is that Africans and Europeans need vastly different kinds of social structures.

Looters caused more damage than the hurricane. The Wal-Mart store in uptown New Orleans survived the storm but was destroyed by looters who took everything. Pathologist Dr Gregory Henderson said: “When night fell, it became like a Stephen King novel. Those predators were holed up in the Centre and they came out and preyed on the people.” He heard from refugees of young girls being “dragged inside the blackened building, raped, then thrown back out.” [tinyurl.com]

Shocked rescue and recovery workers leaving New Orleans reported that large numbers of victims were not killed by the storm, but by lawless blacks on a rampage. New Orleans fireman and rescue worker said the first bodies he recovered “died of either gunshot wounds or had their throats slit ... It’s hard to believe people could turn against one another like that.”

New Orleans, which is 7 times blacker than the U.S. as a whole, has a murder rate even in normal times which is ten times the national average – which means it is much more than ten times the white average.

Arthur Jones, the chief of disaster recovery for Louisiana’s Office of Homeland Security & Emergency Preparedness, said his agency “was caught off guard by the tidal wave of violence. No disaster planner predicted that people would loot gun stores after the storm and shoot at police, rescue officials, and helicopters.” [newsmax.com]

One notes that in predominantly white areas, massive looting and savage behaviour were almost unknown – even during the worst phases of the disaster.

Thomas Jefferson wanted racial separation. So did Francis Scott Key, James Monroe and virtually all the founding fathers of America. So did Abraham Lincoln. Many of them wanted separation on a continental scale.

KEVIN STROM American Dissident Voices, broadcast 18/9/2005
www.nationalvanguard.org

Dark Side of Black People

LET me start by saying that if I had my life to live over a thousand times, the one thing I would not change would be my race. I am proud to be a black man. There are times however, when I wish that certain people and I did not share that trait.

We have seen the really dark side of black people. The day after Hurricane Katrina passed, there were reports of looting but network reporters had been saying that people were looting out of desperation, in search of food and water. A lot they knew!

The pictures I have been seeing are of black people stealing shoes, diapers and television sets. Not food and definitely not water. Not unless the armfuls of clothing, shoes, and appliances count as food and water.

Now, if all the looters were looting out of desperation, how desperate were the guys and girls I saw toting several boxes of size 13 Nikes?

And just what are those guys stealing the plasma television sets going to be watching when there is no power in the entire city?

Desperation? Yeah, right. I am beginning to believe that black people, no matter where in the world they are, are cursed with a genetic predisposition to steal, murder, and create mayhem.

The entire firearm department at a Wal-Mart department store, for example, was cleaned out and the looters used the stolen weapons to rob people. How low is that? Everybody is suffering and the black people seek to rob people who are suffering just like themselves.

It has nothing to do with poverty. Where are the white people in all this? I am sure there are poor white people living in New Orleans, Biloxi and the other towns affected by what has been going on. Is it that the media are not showing pictures of them looting and robbing? Or is it that they are too busy trying to stay alive, and hiding from the blacks.

Just once, I would like for us blacks to take the high road in situations like this, where instead of showing our darkest side, we put our best foot forward. But I guess that would be too much to ask, too much of a case of wishful thinking.

LEIGHTON LEVY, The Jamaica Online Star

No More Mr Nice Guy!

OVER 9,000 square miles and 200 miles of coastline over four states were devastated by Katrina, communication cut off, all utilities ruined, thousands of roadways laid waste, nearly every vehicle swept away, including trucks, planes and boats. New Orleans became virtually impassable.

Undaunted, white rescue workers used whatever means available to help save poor black residents. They were greeted by gunfire.

IMPACT DECEMBER 2005/JANUARY 2006

Swag: Looters with trunk-full of beer & clothes

The Convention Centre served as a massive shelter for violent, barely functioning blacks. In addition to free shelter, food, clothing, haircuts and medicine, each black received a debit card worth $2000, courtesy of the U.S. government.

Thousands of remarkably well-armed black people took over the city, wantonly raping, pillaging and murdering. They car-jacked rescue convoys, shot at rescuers, levee repairmen, and even helicopters carrying out rescue missions. The operation stopped dead in its tracks.

It's been a century-long modus operandi for every black politician to blame Whitey. And for years, white America surrendered the race card trump, placating racial rabble-rousers with over $10-trillion of social programmes. Not enough. They created racial preference laws. Not enough. They laid every guilt trip possible on white people. Not enough.

Well, not this time. See, Whitey wised up ...

Black people caused and could have prevented much in this tragic situation, and when white people tried to help, black people literally tried to kill them. That's a fact.

So, Black America, turn down the volume knob and listen carefully. Hear that? It's the sound of White America heaving a sigh of indifference.

To be sure, this isn't an indictment of all black people, though it's certainly a wake-up slap to a large black majority. It's a direct accusation against liberal race-prostitutes who dominate popular black leadership, create misery and mayhem in the black community for self-aggrandising power, and then detestably blame White America, insisting we don't understand the plight of black people.

After creating their own tragedy, black people across America had a magnificent opportunity to convert adversity into compassionate national unity. Instead, they chose Lord of the Flies anarchy.

I suppose, as they say, it's a black thing.

TOMADKINS, CommonConservative.com
(reprinted in Western Destiny, New Zealand)

Call her Katrina Murphy

YOU don't have to believe in a religion. You don't have to believe in an ideology. You don't even have to believe all the pronouncements of the high priests of Big Science. But there is one thing you must believe, Murphy's law: Whatever can go wrong will go wrong. That is the one thing in which all humanity can have absolute faith.

Validation comes from every sort of subject matter, every era, and every place. The Roman Empire. The space shuttle. Most recently, the devastation caused by hurricane Katrina along the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, especially in New Orleans. Matching every bit of human ingenuity there is an equal amount of carelessness and thoughtlessness that turns triumphs into disasters. Numerous reports indicate that this latest catastrophe was long anticipated.

The media have focused on the immediate losses of the people who lived in the devastated area, but the entire national economy will take some hits. The disruption of petroleum and gas extraction from the Gulf, as well as damage to the refineries, have sent shocks around the world. Fuel prices have shot up dramatically. Reserves are being drawn down in the USA and elsewhere to cover the shortages and OPEC is pumping full tilt.

The port of New Orleans is vital to the U.S. and world economies. Much that is produced in the Mississippi River basin is shipped through this port and much that is needed comes in the same way. There is little or no surplus capacity available on railroads or trucks to replace the barge traffic. One result may be an additional spike in shipping costs added to that caused by higher fuel prices.

Will all these problems cause a recession, or something even worse? The answer is a definite maybe.

Critical Factors, USA

LEONCE Gaiter is the author of Bourbon Street, a novel about race and class in New Orleans.

This black man comments: "Being raised in a sometimes hostile white world has taught me that we are all racists. Denying the racial aspect of the disaster is denying our history."

BOOK REVIEW

REBUILDING WESTERN CIVILISATION

Beyond the 21st Century Collapse by Seymour W. Itzkoff (Paidia Publishers, 2003)

Reviewed by JAMES V. CHAMBERS

SEYMOUR Itzkoff has written an extremely challenging book, the theme of which will doubtless be instantly repudiated by many, but will cause the more thoughtful reader to have a longer-term perspective relating to what is happening around us. Such a reader will be aware of the ongoing ecological decay around the world, and will grasp the misery of over-population that comes to countries that experience the exploding fertility resulting from the intervention of Western medical science and food aid (which in turn suppresses the forces of nature that would normally cull the human populations to a level more in keeping with their resources).

Equality, irresponsibility, utopia

Indeed, Itzkoff sees the problems of the world as largely due to what he calls a paralysis of ideology in the North American and European West. This ideological fixation, he says, is centred on a shibboleth that requires us to abandon the notion that people should be responsible for the support of their own offspring, and that instead attempts to equalize social and economic conditions around the world.

"This ideological fixation requires us to abandon the notion that people should be responsible for the support of their own offspring . . ."

The instrumental pathway chosen by the West, he states, is to redistribute the wealth produced by the more creative and productive peoples to the helpless and hopeless of the world. To Itzkoff, the root of the problem is the quasi-theological assumption that all humans have the intellectual capacity to recreate the cultural accomplishments and the scientific/technological/economic achievements of the great Eurasian civilizations.

This latest book by Itzkoff is a continuation of a series of works devoted to the prospects for our species, the nature of our evolutionary hegira [destiny?], and the creative-symbolic thrust of high intellect.

Itzkoff claims that Homo sapiens is alone in the natural world. We can destroy the human race in our ignorance as a result of the ideological infatuations that soar beyond reality. The 20th Century was probably a landmark in the massive blood-letting and suffering incurred by the human animal, but he believes that the 21st Century will mark a new low, in that the collapse of Western Civilization will be internationally pervasive.

On Human Nature

Itzkoff continues to advance a theme that expands far beyond the disciplines of instinctual automaticity. It is that our hyper-inflated cortex has led us onto an unknown biological pathway. Our human nature, rooted in our evolutionary primate roots, sets no clear boundaries from which social policy suitable to our present conditions can be extrapolated. From the first cooking of animal meat, to the hesitant 18th Century inoculations against the pox, humans have experimented with their behaviour, struggling to adapt it to the new, non-feral world that we have created. Religious beliefs ... and the egalitarian ideals that were appropriate to a time when human beings lived in small, closely-related kinship groups, need to be re-thought ...

22nd Century Economics

Civilizational economic theory reflective of the most creative productivity of the past and present has to argue for the irrationality of the so-called culture of the masses, and with it the mass production of the generic. A creative, innovative economy of quality requires far fewer people living on the planet. Why now do we need the 6.5 billion or the 9 - 10 billion to come at mid-century? The technology central to the production of the basics of life requires very few hands.

Indeed, with less population the drive of power-brokers to profit by mass production would be reduced; and perhaps also the frenetic competition to achieve breakthroughs in technology and productive wealth. We can do without the super-rich or the massive bureaucracies of government necessary to manage this mass of complexity. Economics should be linked with beauty and individuality. In the Silicon Valleys of the world, we have the germ of such discriminatory economics. The declining intelligence of the human mass, linked with the explosive numbers of humans on the planet, makes this dream of quality and innovation ... a distant hope for the 22nd Century and beyond ...

Universality and Nationality

Here, Itzkoff sees the yin and yang of historical social dynamics. On the one hand, we see the move to form the European Union and the necessities of internationalism, defence, commerce, political amity and peace. But look again, he says: people still cherish their national identity, their languages and independence as nations. In the 21st Century there are two great poles of human sociality. First, the need to see universal causal principles in the world, these the source from which a universal scientific culture is now being framed. But we also need the pluralism implied by the [distinctive cultures]. Humans need to reflect their unique individuality in association with fellow nationals ...

Conclusions

The ongoing engorgement of vast populations of humans is physically destroying our ecological heritage as well as our ability to manage the social system that once served humans in the developed democracies. We will have between 9 and 10 billion humans on our planet by mid-century. They will all cry out for the amenities of civilization as promised them by our "brightest and most beautiful". But it will not be possible to provide this huge population with what they want. The bulk of this population-surge will be from the lower levels of human intelligence and education. They will not on their own be able to produce the institutions, wealth, and culture that they will need to live lives becoming to this civilizational heritage. The social stresses incurred by our promises and the inevitable failures will eventually bring down the international system.

"The bulk of this population-surge ... will not on their own be able to produce the institutions, wealth, and culture that they will need . . ."

Itzkoff concludes this wide-ranging, philosophical but realistic work by observing that the masses of the world are being sustained by the medical and economic largesse of the highly intelligent productive middle classes of the more advanced nations. As we near the middle of the 21st Century, he fears, this largesse (which is stimulating the demographic explosion from the lower end of the human intelligence curve and producing some 9 - 10 billion people) will collapse in paralysis. The wealth and ability to preserve civilization will then disappear, causing untold suffering to those unknowing victims of the misplaced ideological philanthropy of the West. The only hope, as he sees it, is a smaller total world population, of high education and intelligence, living in semi-independent cultural enclaves, yet interconnected in a physically and legally related world community.

Although I can say with certainty that most readers will find something in the book with which they will disagree, Itzkoff dares to draw our attention to problems that most writers fear to discuss, and for this – and the fact that he forces us to face reality – he is to be highly commended.

Dr JAMES V. CHAMBERS (Council for Social & Economic Studies), in The Journal of Social, Political & Economic Studies, USA. This review has been slightly shortened for space reasons.

Demography, Race, Crime, Immigration

Mongrelizing Italy

MARCELLO Pera of the Forza Italia Party is the Speaker of Italy's senate. "In Europe," he said recently, "the population is decreasing, the doors are open to uncontrolled immigration, and we will all become members of a mixed race."

This shocked many in Italy, especially since Pera is the second highest official in the country. But Deputy Prime Minister Giulio Tremonti said he agreed with Pera.

Afef Jnifen, a Tunisian-born former model who has Italian citizenship, said Pera's words amounted to "anti-Islamic instigation" and that "Italians were more tolerant than Pera." Miss Jnifen, who is married to an Italian, promotes herself as unofficial ambassador for Islam in Italy.

The Italian nationalist party, the Northern League, is part of Italy's ruling coalition. Its newspaper discussed Jnifen's political ambitions under the headline "Mongrel Candidacies", and said her slogan should rather be "Let's mongrelize Italy".

The Guardian, England

Aliens

ANY alien residing on the territory of white nations will sooner or later obtain equal rights with the original nations. In eliminating definitively the notion of blood – that is race – from the concept of nationhood, they have signed the death warrant of the said nation. Indeed, what use will there be for the sovereignty of the state, flag, language, if the people who created them just disappear in a flood of foreign blood?

OLIVIER DEVALEZ in Creativité, Germany

The Might of the Belly

THE Arabo-Moslem world does not risk anything from the New American Imperialism or the politics of Likud, even if American armies are walking about Mesopotamia in a ridiculous remake of 19th Century colonialism. Why? Because it has demography, the might of the womb and that of culture and religion in its favour."

GUILLAUME FAYE, Le Coup d'Etat Mondial, Ed. L'Aencre, France

Crime in the USA

A resident of Los Angeles reports that "identity theft" continues to be the big crime in his town, including fraudulent credit card usage and "look alike" e-mails. In a 2-week period in one Los Angeles neighbourhood alone, five major robberies took place, every one committed by "African-Americans". The nine burglaries committed in the same area during that period have not been solved.

Crime in Sweden

AN interesting rape statistic from Sweden is that 80% of rapes in Sweden are caused by immigrants. We are always hearing how the Swedes supported Africa and how liberal and politically correct they are. Yet violent and deadly crimes, including rape, have skyrocketed since the immigration flood began in Europe.

IMPACT DECEMBER 2005/JANUARY 2006

Two Swedish girls were brutally beaten and raped last New Years Eve in Gothenburg, Sweden. The attackers were black immigrants from Africa. Swedish police have finally, after nine months, managed to find one of the attackers. In the mainstream media he is described as 'Finnish'. What they have been trying to hide is the fact that he's a black African with Finnish citizenship.

AfricanCrisis.org (Rense.com)

A wanderer on a ride

MY friends and I pedalled from 500 miles north of the Arctic Circle, through Norway into Denmark, Holland, France and now into Germany, on our way into the Swiss Alps. We then head south toward Italy with our final destination of Athens. Our mileage exceeds 3,500 miles. Not bad for a journalist aged 60.

A short hop through Holland and France gave us a look at these countries and why the people voted down the EU. Sure shot a thorn into the One World Order crowd! Seems that people love their countries, and like to keep them their countries! Humanity is clan-like in nature and that will not change. Much like the myth of Marxism, you cannot succeed against human nature.

I have been interviewing dozens of Europeans on their take of illegal immigration invading their countries. In the past week, British citizens suffered four bombings, killing a lot of people. Britain is scared to death because it suffers two million unassimilated Moslems [to live in their country] who threaten the foundation of British society. It's insidious, pernicious, pervasive and is creating monstrous consequences.

Norway's ruling elite is bamboozled by multi-culturalism's farcical insanity and their own isolation from the consequences of importing Third World immigrants from Africa, minorities from Kosovo and other war-torn countries. Norway's leaders refuse to examine the skyrocketing rapes, murders, female genital mutilation and drug gangs in Bergen, Trondheim and Oslo. Immigrants exceed 400,000. Once they dump immigrants on their hapless four million Norwegian citizens. Anyone bringing valid complaints is scoffed at. The immigrants ride welfare like a new art form. They bring zero work skills, education and even less academic ability. One Norwegian said: "These immigrants ... are antagonistic, they flood our welfare system with babies and needs, while doing nothing to earn their keep. It's a free-for-all coming out of our pockets ... If we speak up, our own leaders call us racists. Why the government wants this growing wave of crime, drugs, and tension in Norway is beyond me."

Amsterdam is no longer Holland. It has taken in so many people from the Middle East and Africa that they will soon outnumber the Dutch within decades. It's so bad that many Dutch leaders were threatened by Moslems after the Theo van Gogh killing.

The Dutch have closed their borders and are deporting illegals. But it may be too late for them. One teacher said, "We're headed for civil war within five years and it will be the immigrants against us."

Southern France is now known as Northern Nigeria. Over five million Moslems own Southern France. They bring France new and unwanted problems as to women's rights, aggressive [religious attitudes], and the loss of the French language. Immigrants out-propagate the French, and there is speculation that France will become France-Arabia within this century. The French will either lose their country and language, or wall off southern France to the immigrants to save themselves.

Germany suffers from Turks arriving in an unending line as well as Africans. After WWII, no one would help Germany. Europeans wouldn't work or trade with them. Germans invited Turkish immigrants who suffered Third World poverty. They came but were not forced to return. They stayed, but did not become Germans. They are [barely] tolerated. However, since Germany is afraid of being called racist, they watch helplessly while their country is overrun. "Immigrants multiply faster than us," one man from Stuttgart said. "They do not respect our standards, we are being overwhelmed. They are not conquering us with the sword, but with the womb." What is the greater threat?

Germany suffers from dwindling space. The Germans and their immigrants will face the same consequences facing Bangladesh, which houses a population of 129 million people in a land mass the size of Ohio. Are Bangladeshis miserable? They set the benchmark for human misery and despair. Chinese, at 1.3 billion, suffer compaction more than any American can imagine. India is just plain miserably poor with over 1.1 billion. Will Germany face the same fate? How about France and Holland?

The sobering reality is America accepts four million immigrants a year – more than all other nations combined.

As hard as I pedal this bike, I can't drive this point home enough: The Third World grows by 85 million poor people every year, so there is no end to the line. Instead of solving the population crisis at the core in those countries, First World countries, by accepting immigrants, are simply creating the same crisis in their own countries.

Who is at fault? For starters, the Catholic and Protestant churches and Islam adhere to doctrines and paradigms that dwell in the past and which fail present realities, clinging to the past to the detriment of their own followers. Some advocate unlimited birthrates. Secondly, leaders suffer fear from those religious power houses. Third, capitalists apply the archaic mantra of 'growth, growth, growth at any cost', so a few become wealthy while the masses suffer. We're tearing this planet up. Fourth, egocentric politicians won't look beyond their noses. Instead of seeking toward a viable future, they pander to the capricious present. Finally, a gullible public-denial in Europe and America allow themselves to be led like lambs to the slaughter.

[Few] on either side of the Atlantic address the myriad of accelerating consequences brought about by immigration.

Up ahead, I face the Swiss Alps and enormous, gut-busting climbs. Let's get busy working to get our borders shut down and forcing this president to serve America and our citizens instead of foreign interests and foreign populations crashing into our country.

FROSTY WOOLDRIDGE,

www.FrostyWooldridge.com (rense.com)

Over the past 26 years, Frosty Wooldridge has cycled 100,000 miles around the globe, is a journalist, author, environmentalist and lecturer. His latest book is entitled "Immigration's unarmed invasion – Deadly consequences".

Choosing the manner of death

I am getting rather bored with Britain's Finance Minister Gordon Brown's crusade to save the Third World – a cynical attempt to establish himself as a 'world statesman' by the time he becomes Prime Minister.

His immunisation programme for developing countries will serve largely to preserve children to an age where they can die of starvation inflicted by the policies of the monsters who run their benighted countries.

Without wishing to appear uncharitable, wouldn't it be a better idea to deal with safeguarding the British population against bird flu or MRSA, before worrying about the plight of those to whom the government owes no duty of care?

Editorial in London Daily Mail

An Indian view

RECENT riots in Birmingham [England] left a man dead, a policeman and others injured. Once when these streets blew up it was a manifestation of black anger against "white racism". This time, apparently the violence erupted between black and Asian citizens; you know – primitive, dark tribes fighting each other just as they do in Rwanda and Kashmir.

These clashes are spreading. Sikhs fighting Moslems, or Caribbeans stabbing Nigerians, or whites assaulted by brown and black brutes.

Life is better for Britons of colour than ever before ... [yet] racism is getting worse than any of us ever anticipated.

The media is full of cultivated voices warning that the British nation is dying and that it is the fault of the many cultures who came and stayed.

YASMIN ALIBHAI in
The Independent, London

ECONOMIC HIT MAN CONFESSES

A former Washington 'insider', John Perkins, has finally come clean in a book entitled "Confessions of an Economic Hit Man". His startling book, a 'must-read' for anyone who wants to know why America is hated around the world, reveals how foreign governments are intimidated and why un-cooperative leaders are assassinated while the U.S. masquerades as a benefactor.

For more than 15 years, former corporate consultant Perkins, acting as a third-party intermediary between the U.S. and foreign leaders, lived in a dangerous 'political underworld' of deceit, bribery, loan-sharking and murder while advancing America's shady foreign policy interests.

Perkins finally went public – detailing how the U.S. "gets what it wants" by using mafia-style tactics – after being guilt-ridden from taking a half-million-dollar bribe from the Stoner-Webster Corp. to keep silent and being haunted by the memory of the 9/11 tragedy.

Confessions clearly shows the ugly side of America's empire building and provides a first-hand account of why the jackals in the CIA were responsible for the assassinations of President Omar Torrijos of Panama and President Jaime Roldas of Ecuador. Perkins says the pair were killed after they failed to accept U.S.-sponsored bank loans. Essentially, these inflated loans were geared to bankrupt both countries, leaving behind a sea of poverty while forcing them to use American corporations which would have profited greatly. "It's the way the game is played," said Perkins. "When both these leaders refused to play ball, mysteriously they died in plane crashes several months later."

"In Indonesia, Panama, South America, Saudi Arabia, Iraq and Iran, the U.S. has used the same system of economic intimidation, assassination, and ultimately war as a last resort to get what it wants."*

Perkins remembers being first recruited by the Boston consulting firm of Chas. T. Main in 1971 after a 2-year stint in the Peace Corps. The firm worked closely with the National Security Agency (NSA) and CIA, enlisting Perkins for his knowledge of languages gained while working in Ecuador.

Perkins describes his 10-year tenure with the consulting firm, after being trained and given his first assignment in Indonesia, as "technically legal, but morally and ethically bankrupt."

Essentially, no matter where he travelled or what leader he was hired to manipulate, the modus operandi was the same. Perkins would meet with a leader of a targeted country, encouraging him to accept a large loan for an inflated project that both the CIA and the leader knew the country could not afford. When the loan was accepted, usually through U.S. connections at the World Bank, the money would be transferred to a bank in the U.S. and then funnelled back to U.S. companies through massive construction and engineering projects.

Perkins's job was to provide inflated loan estimates, saddling the under-developed country with a massive debt, impossible to repay, and leaving the country at the mercy of the U.S. to dictate repayment terms. These terms often-times included the right to construct a strategically important military base, a UN vote in support of U.S. policy or cheap access to the country's natural resources.

"Once the Third World country was economically indebted to the U.S., the CIA would then have its hooks into manipulating the course and direction of the country's political agenda," said Perkins. He added that if this type of loan were arranged between private parties, it would be called extortion, but in the international arena it's simply dismissed as economic development.

In cases where leaders refused to be bribed by U.S. bankrolls, Perkins reminded them of the fate of others like Torrijos of Panama or Roldas of Ecuador, who were either killed or were the victims of a CIA-orchestrated coup. This type of American extortion was also used by Perkins in Saudi Arabia after the 1973 oil embargo when Washington offered to take the oil-rich nation into the 20th Century.

GREG SZYMANSKI in American Free Press, USA.

*Obviously concentrating on South American and Mid-East victims of U.S. extortion methods, Perkins makes no mention of the assassination of South African PM Hendrik Verwoerd in 1966 and the subsequent slow-motion coup d'etat resulting in white power being handed over to revolutionaries.

Keeping the boat afloat

WHILE it is not certain that stocks will crash in the near future, the risk is higher than it has been since 1987. This risk is augmented by the departure of Alan Greenspan as Fed Chairman. He has not been able to reform the U.S. financial system, but by some combination of luck and cleverness, he has been able to keep its numerous Ponzi schemes afloat. This has generated charisma.

The next Fed Chairman faces an impossible job. He has to keep all these bubbles from bursting, but he will not have the magical touch of a Greenspan. Nobody in his right mind would accept the appointment. Who would knowingly volunteer to be the captain of the Titanic? So the person appointed must be blissfully unaware of what the problems are. There will be no lack of candidates; there are a lot of economists who would enjoy the prestige and are dumb enough to believe their own theories.

Eventually the people in the industrialized countries will become as worldly-wise as Third World peasants, who listen to the lies their leaders tell them and then stuff silver coins into their mattresses. Nobody with any knowledge of history would ever believe anything a politician or central banker says. Only years of schooling can produce such ignorance. Critical Factors, USA

ALAN GREENSPAN, central banker to the world is to retire, after 18 years as head of the Federal Reserve in the USA

THE origins of Barclays lie in financing the slave trade in the West Indies. It then financed colonialism ... Barclays is now financing the BAe Hawk and BAe/Saab Gripen contracts of SA's arms deal, despite being alerted to alleged corruption.

British PM Tony Blair put massive pressure on our government to buy the aircraft. Why? And why did SA's government succumb?

The former Secretary for Defence and SA Air Force leaders objected to the BAe warplanes as being too expensive and unsuited to our requirements. They were overruled by former Defence Minister Joe Modise and the Cabinet sub-committee chaired by then-Deputy President Thabo Mbeki.

The "default clauses" in the Barclays arms deal loan agreements are potentially catastrophic for SA, yet have never been referred to Parliament. Their terms include ceding control over SA's economic policies to Barclays, the British government and the IMF. Is this why the Finance Minister and the Cabinet approved Barclays' takeover of Absa?

Letter by TERRY CRAWFORD-BROWNE
in Mail & Guardian, Cape Town

IMPACT DECEMBER 2005/JANUARY 2006

SECRET AGENT

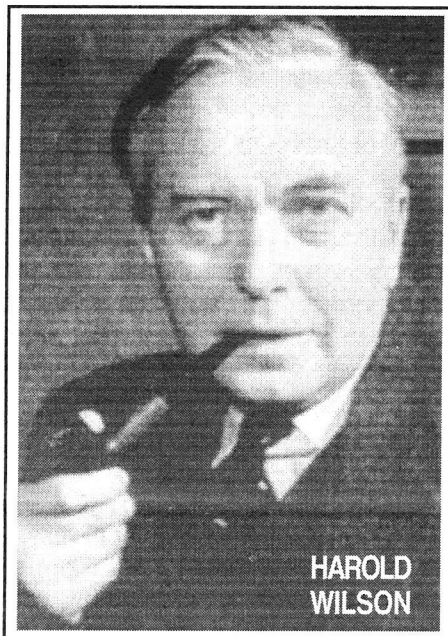

British Intelligence controlled from USSR

FOR many years British Intelligence has worked in close collaboration with the American CIA and Israeli Mossad. Before WWII, under Neville Chamberlain, the counter-espionage services of MI5 and MI6 were directed against Communism as the main enemy.

However, almost immediately after becoming Prime Minister, Winston Churchill sacked the founding father of the internal security services, Sir Vernon Kell, and by degrees packed MI5 and MI6 with communist sympathizers. A Soviet booklet titled Russia's Enemies in Britain devoted 39 of its 70 pages to attacking a certain Kenneth de Courcy, who had worked on the editorial board of a publication called Intelligence Digest. This publication exposed Victor Rothschild, a member of the powerful banking family, who had joined MI5 at the outbreak of the war, as "the patron of the Russian group of spies". Victor Rothschild recruited large numbers of disaffected students at Oxford and Cambridge Universities to act as Soviet agents. Many of these later joined MI5 and MI6, so that under Churchill the British Security Service was for many years no more than a branch of the Soviet KGB. Thanks to Churchill and his close friend Rothschild, communists and/or [security risk] homosexuals virtually controlled MI5 and MI6. We can name just a few of these: Roger Hollis, in 1940 Assistant Director of 'F' Division, monitoring 'extremist' political parties, and later promoted to head of British Intelligence; Guy Liddell, under whose auspices known traitors like Blunt and Burgess [and Maclean] entered service; Maxwell Knight, and a host of others.

Harold Wilson, Soviet Agent

In her book Enemies of the Queen, Dr Kitty Little revealed that from the very beginning Harold Wilson was a communist agent secretly working for the destruction of Britain and for the establishment of a Marxist one-world government. She described how, as a young student, she was invited to Wilson's room at University College, Oxford, in the summer of 1940, when Wilson attempted to recruit her into his organisation. He told her that he was the 'political head' of the organisation whose aim was to infiltrate the political parties at the top and work to destroy traditional Britain. Wilson informed her that the man in charge of the whole organisation was "the head of the Biological Section", whom he didn't name. We do not have to guess very hard to know exactly who this was. When Wilson later became Prime Minister, he was investigated by MI5 and cleared, but it was later discovered that the head of British Intelligence, Roger Hollis, was himself a Soviet agent. So the British Government of the time was headed by a Soviet agent and so was British Intelligence!

It cannot be without significance that Wilson took over the leadership of the Labour Party with the sudden death of Hugh Gaitskell in January 1963, at the age of 56. Wilson was Prime Minister during 1964-1970 and 1974-1976. Likewise, Tony Blair, a political nonentity, was appointed leader of the party upon the sudden death of John Smith, due to a heart condition – or so we have been told. According to one-time top KGB agent, Anatoly Golitsyn, in his book The Perestroika Deception, British Intelligence was heavily infiltrated by the Soviet KGB, and they (the KGB) planned "the victory of the Labour Party in the national elections in Britain in the 1990s." For years, all leading Labourites were members of the Fabian Society, whose policy of change by stealth and deception is embodied in its emblem of a wolf in sheep's clothing.

It would be interesting to know just how much of so-called 'British' Government policy over the years was formulated in Moscow. The race laws certainly were. The first Race Relations Bill was introduced into the House of Commons by the Labour Attorney General, an immigrant Russian-Jew, Sir Frank Soskice, in 1965. Soskice was the son of Kerensky's private secretary. It was Kerensky (real name Aaron Kirbitze) who – after the overthrow of the Tsar's throne – handed over the 1917 revolution in Russia to Lenin and Trotsky. According to Harold Wallace Rosenthal, in his Confessions, all the main policies pursued by Western governments were formulated in Moscow and Israel.

RICHARD PORTER in
Spearhead, England (no longer published)

The impact on Southern Africa

IT was a British Tory Prime Minister, Harold MacMillan, who announced "The Winds of Change" in a 1960 speech, delivered at the invitation of the Verwoerd government, to the joint House of Assembly and Senate in Cape Town. Another Tory prime minister, Margaret Thatcher insisted that the National Party of SA release Nelson Mandela and his fellow terrorist conspirators from prison.

However, it was left to the British Labour Party to deliver the coup de grace in breaking the back of both South Africa and Rhodesia.

VENEZUELA, THE OIL POT

EVER since the Venezuelans voted left-wing Hugo Chavez in a 1998 landslide election victory, they have been waiting for America's move on their president.

That's why it didn't surprise anyone when in August this year Pat Robertson – one of America's leading evangelicals and a friend of George W. Bush – called for an American-backed murder of Chavez.

Everyone has their stories about the 2002 coup, and the 47-hour presidency of Pedro Estanga, the head of Venezuelan federation of business. That April, the elected president Chavez was kidnapped and removed from power in a manoeuvre orchestrated by the media, a few generals and many of the wealthy. High-ranking U.S. officials met with Venezuelan opposition leaders in the weeks and days before the military coup on April 11, 2002. According to The World in Review, "there is now hard evidence that the CIA knew that the coup was being plotted, and Washington was the first capital in the world to recognize the illegitimate government of Carmona which was installed by the coup. The Bush administration supplied funds to opposition groups that organized the coup. It also funded the sabotage of the oil industry in December 2002/January 2003, which cost that country's economy some $10,000-million."

Washington was eager to ensure the largest pot of oil outside the Middle East

Readers Forum

HERE in the UK, we seem to be on the slippery slope into the pit, at an ever-increasing rate. One can only hope that on the downward slide there will be unexpected deliverance. We sure need something or someone!

I heartily agree with JMvZ's comments (Impact, Oct/Nov): "The reasons for terrorism can be debated ad infinitum. Now it is Britain's and America's turn to taste fear. What goes around comes around." In fact, I have been trying to tell people this ever since I returned to the UK – but will they listen?

– H J (Edinburgh, Scotland)
* * *

WHEN I set off on my travels a few months ago, that grumpy old man of Rock music, St Bob [Geldof] was trying to make Poverty History in Africa. Now that the Make Poverty History campaign is history itself, I gather that St Bob got the applause he craved, everyone had a jolly good time and Poverty is still with us. Most people have a vague idea that Poverty in Africa is caused by corrupt dictators. Just get rid of those dictators and all would be well. However, if they would only come down from their politically correct Dream World, they would realise that poverty is the result of the failings of the black man himself [as many blacks have admitted].

Where the white man goes, industry and prosperity follow. Take white control away and everything sinks into chaos, warfare, starvation and poverty. And all Bob's concerts and all Bob's money cannot put Africa together again!
– R E (Tipperary, Ireland)
* * *

THERE are so few trained soldiers in Britain that a determined Moslem coup could stand a chance. Yet Blair is ready to send 5,000 extra troops into Afghanistan.

More British troops to Kabul! Doesn't the disastrous retreat from Kabul in 1842 mean anything to the politicians? And if the hardened Soviet Army had to pull out – God help our lads!

– D T (Brighton, England)
* * *

WHEN will the world's whites say: "Enough!" and chase foreigners out of their homelands? Friends who recently visited Belgium, Holland and the UK say that intermarriage between blacks and white girls is horrific. Those whites overseas who understand the problem ask what will happen to all the coloured children? Even here in Cape Town, some low-class white girls flaunt their Coloured boyfriends.

It's a real pleasure to receive Impact and I look forward keenly to each issue.

CAPETONIAN
* * *

THE idea that I am really interested in is the not-going-entirely-by language or nationality. My father was a fiery Flemish nationalist, who certainly did not expect his grandchildren to have 4 different as home language and 8 nationalities, our own Diaspora. Language and nationality and religion can change, but race and genes one can't change; you can destroy your own genes by mixing them so that the next generation gets half-half. Offspring can only transmit what they receive. – V.D. (Cape)
* * *

IT is obvious that a "South African identity" does not exist. Would I go to fight in Mbeki's army? What for? I am a second class citizen in somebody else's country. Why should I sing the new national anthem? It is not mine. It was imposed on me against my will. Why should I follow leaders who do not even look like me and with whom I have nothing in common. Should I get emotional about AIDS?

National identity does not exist in SA. We are a concoction, which in due course will fall apart. We have nothing in common except a piece of land which has been and will again be fought over.

But there is hope. Europe is headed for racial civil war within the next 10 years as it endeavours to expel its alien population. Only the other day, an article in the Cape Times stated that black and white relations have reached a final breach in the USA.

All over the African continent, tribe slaughters tribe on a huge scale. With increased population and diminishing resources we will see that all over the world in the next ten or twenty years. It is estimated that oil will last for another 40 years, or less. There will be tremendous changes in the world. I predict that the present population of 6 billion will not increase to 9 billion, but will instead shrink to a sustainable 500 million. So why on earth should "developed" countries open their borders to millions of "useless eaters"? It doesn't make sense.

Nature will bend for a while, but eventually it will take its revenge. The golden age of Pericles lasted 17 years, ours will not last another fifty. It is just a question of time. Those who survive the crash will not be those worried about the fate of the pygmies in Central Africa or the people of Darfur. It will be those who have the will to survive and be ruthless enough to carry it through.

The only thing that counts for survival will be Race and Will. Sentiments are fine in peacetime, but in times of struggle, it is the priorities that count. Those who have forgotten that will end up on the scrapheap of history.

– PRO PATRIA (Cape Town)
* * *

YOUR magazine is really interesting. I especially like the way you carry news from around the world. This is sorely needed. We must all stand together or we will all fall together!

You may be interested to know that I have sent copies of a number of your June/July articles to friends and acquaintances abroad. At least one of them, living in Arizona, was not even aware of the local situation [there] until she read your report! – J G (London, England)
* * *

YOU are a hero on a very precarious battleground. You teach us. You fill our heads with knowledge and our hearts with courage. – T N (Cape Town)
* * *

IT is marvellous how you have achieved what you have, in single-handedly producing a fantastic read every other month. – J A (Verwoerdburg) □

Some Sources used in this issue of Impact:

Adelaide Institute Newsletter, PO Box 3300, Adelaide 5067, Australia
American Dissident Voices, Box 5145 Charlottesville VA 22905 USA
American Renaissance, PO Box 527, Oakton VA 22124, USA. www.amren.com
Creativité, Postfach 1148, DE-48292 Nottuln, Germany
Criminal Politics, PO Box 37812 Cincinnati OH 45222, USA
Critical Factors, PO Box 3639 Gaithersburg MD 20885, USA
Die Afrikaner, Box 1888, Pretoria 0001
Ed. L'Aencre, 12 rue de la Sourdiere, FR-75001 Paris, France
Nat. & Internat. News Service, PO Box 635 Strathpine Post Shop, Qld 4500 Australia
Nouvelle Ecole, 41 rue Barrault F-75013 Paris France
Ralph Pentecost Info-Letter, 50 Maynard St, 8001 Gardens, Cape Town
Right Now, PO Box 2085, London W1A 5SX, England
Spearhead, PO Box 2471, Hove E.Sussex BN3 4DT, England
The Journal of Social, Political & Economic Studies, PO Box 34070, N.W., Washington DC 20043, USA
The Mankind Quarterly, PO Box 34070, NW Washington DC 20043 USA
The Nationalist Times, PO Box 426, Allison Park, PA 15101, USA. email: mail@anu.org
Western Destiny, PO Box 1627, Paraparaumu Beach, New Zealand
World in Review, 2533 North Carson St, Suite #J-118, Carson City NV 89706 USA

* A gun in the hand is better than a cop on the phone. * Gun control is not about guns, it's about control.
* If guns are outlawed, can we use swords or knives to protect ourselves?
* You don't shoot to kill. You shoot to stay alive.

An Historic Church Rises Phoenix-like from the Ashes

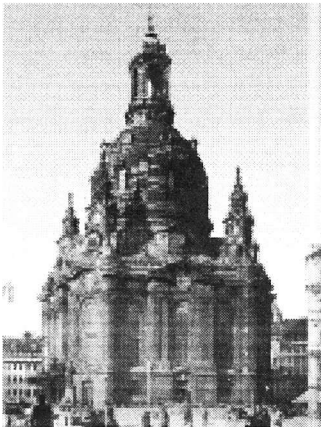

DURING the May 1945 Allied terror bombing of Dresden and other German cities such as Hamburg, hundreds of thousands of non-combatants perished, mainly women and children – who had been seeking asylum in Saxony from the Red Army which was advancing from the east. Dresden itself was demolished in its entirety by British and American aerial bombing. David Irving's narrative of this assault became world famous.

One of the consequences of the bombing was the destruction of the historic Frauenkirche, built in 1726, a huge and beautiful example of 18th Century Protestant architecture. Since then, the ruins have remained as a painful reminder of the firestorm, with cattle grazing in the shadow of the ruined building.

A sponsored enterprise was launched to rebuild the Frauenkirche, which reached completion in October 2005. The church has been completely rebuilt on the original plans, with the new dome being of the same kind of stone as the original, and the ceiling inside the dome having the same paintings as the original.

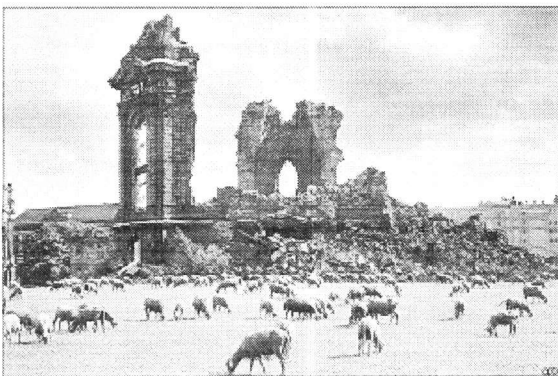

A ceremony was held to inaugurate the risen Frauenkirche. One of the patrons of the church's restoration, Prince Michael, Duke of Kent – speaking perfectly in German – gave a deeply serious speech calling for reconciliation after 60 years.

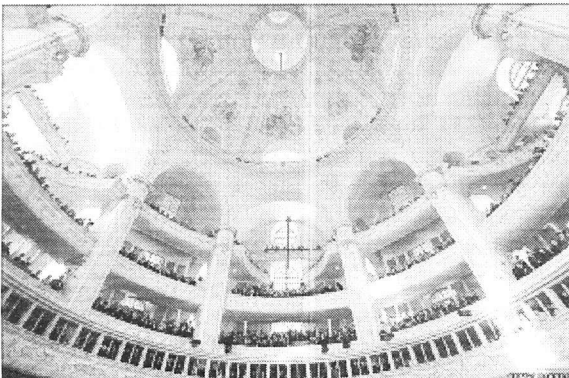

The original Frauenkirche, in Dresden, built in 1726

Bombed ruins of the church in a ruined city, 1945

Cattle grazing among the ruins

Beautiful paintings on the ceiling of the dome of the reconstructed church

The Frauenkirche, reconstructed, and inaugurated in 2005

Thoughts to Ponder . . .

HAPPINESS is not achieved by the conscious pursuit of happiness; it is generally the by-product of other activities. ALDOUS HUXLEY

A real father hands out stern punishment, as well as largesse. ORION

AGGRESSIVE and rigorous policing does suppress violence.

KEVIN J. MULLEN in Dangerous Strangers

BRITAIN is like the Athens of Pericles who – by his pleonexia, or ungovernable greed – placed his world on the slippery slope leading to desolation and ruin.

Prof THOMAS CALLENDER in The Athenian Empire and the British (1960)

AMERICANS are too soon old and too late smart. German saying

THE mill will never grind
With the water that has passed.
SARAH DOUDNEY

GOVERNMENT big enough to supply everything you need is big enough to take everything you have.

THOMAS JEFFERSON

MUST I plead with the robber to give me back what is mine?

SYDNEY GREGAN

IMPACT is an independent bi-monthly review. While every reasonable effort is made to ensure the accuracy and soundness of this publication, such is not warranted. Neither writers nor the publisher will bear responsibility for the consequences of any actions based on the information or recommendations contained within. Furthermore, they reserve the right to publish views contrary to their own, so long as the material is illuminating.

IMPACT

Box 2055, Noorsekloof,
Jeffreys Bay 6331, RSA

Annual subscription - 6 issues per year

SA (Normal) R108
(Pensioners) R102

SWA/Namibia surface: R108 air: R115

USA sea: $30 air: $45

Canada sea: $35 air: $50

U.K. sea: £15 air: £25

Europe sea: €30 air: €45

Overseas subscribers: Cash preferred, OR add
$8/£5/€8 for conversion of foreign cheques