CRONULLA: THE PERILS OF LEADERLESS RESISTANCE

We have all seen the media coverage of the spontaneous gathering at Cronulla Beach - some of National Action's members witnessed it. We know what actually happened there, as opposed to the media hype. However, it is the aftermath and the uses to which this event is being put which may determine its real significance to Australia's political future. The signs are not encouraging.

As we all know, most Australian suburbs and towns which have not been repopulated by Third World immigration contain large numbers of youths with basically the same attitudes as those displayed by the crowd at Cronulla in December. What made the spontaneous gathering possible was not the use of text messaging of course, but the frustration of years of harassment by groups of Muslim Middle-Easterners and police unwillingness to do anything about it.

Those close to John Howard wanted this. Why?

Elsewhere in this issue we have commented on how the Prime Minister has been running the largest program of Third World immigration ever. However, as NA News has also commented on in the past, Howard needs the votes of "racists". Howard insiders like talk-show host Alan Jones made the turn-out of five thousand Aussies at Cronulla possible. Howard's reaction to the events was to provide wink-nudge support. This is not because he is "one of us" but because he knows that anti-Arab sentiment here translates into support for the Government's involvement in the foolish American adventure in the Middle East. This is not logical per se, but it is the way populist politics works.

The Howard Government is responsible for the largest influx of Muslim immigrants in Australia's history. Yet he is happy to receive the votes of those who detest them. Put any interpretation on these facts you want. If there was any doubt who was laughing the loudest over the events at Cronulla, one has only to read articles by Mark Steyn, obsessive apologist for "Anglosphere" imperialism and Zionism, who refers condescendingly to "Sydney's excitable youths" (The Australian 11/1/06). Yes, despite the obvious risks, our internationalist elite can well afford a bit of ugliness directed against a group that will never have any influence over Australia except as a pretext for more government dictatorship.

In the aftermath, the political system tidied up, getting "ringleaders" to admit they had only been drunk and stupid; that there was no political agenda. It was all a bit of letting off steam. The establishment was prepared to concede that. In return the police were given more powers despite refusing to use those they already had to curb Arab gang violence.

Police "enforce" gang reprisals

It is no coincidence that the target of massive police operations were European suburbs of Sydney. At the same time, police allowed the rampages of Arab gangs through Maroubra. There was never any question of Arab "revenge" attacks the following weekend. Using those magical discretionary powers, NSW police had "defused" the situation by allowing the gangs to get their pound of flesh. Nobody serious expected European youth to take on police. When police began bashing some of them at Cronulla, they seemed more concerned about dropping their stubbies than any thoughts of civil resistance.

It has now been more or less admitted by the NSW police that they permitted the Muslim gang rampages through European Australian suburbs. The officer in charge of investigating the "Cronulla riot" has been stood down for refusing to act on video footage that clearly showed Muslim youths bashing a European youth. The police commissioner has admitted his force knew about the horrendous attacks upon Maroubra and Cronulla but kept away because of fears for their own safety. What a bloody disgrace! Fear did not prevent police from wading bashing member of the crowd of several thousand Australians at Cronulla.

EDITORIAL

The Need for Real Nationalism

The events at Cronulla demonstrate the need for a real Nationalist movement in this country. "C'mon Aussie!" populism is not going to save the country.

The lack of a Nationalist presence in Australian politics is all too apparent. Where, apart from National Action (and independent papers like Australian Resurgence), is there a commitment to changing the system of so-called government in this country from a constitutional, liberal monarchy to an independent nation led by an empowered Head of State; where is the commitment to the Eureka flag, the only nationalist emblem of Australia?; where is the commitment to organic social structures and representation, against liberal social atomism and parliamentarianism?; where is the demand for a halt to non-European immigration? In these matters, pillars of Australian Nationalism, Australian National Action is unique.

These issues are not negotiable. They have always been at the core of the Nationalist ideal of the Australia of the future. They are important concepts, and not least those dealing with our form of state.

For the present predicament of this country is entirely due to its institutional and social make-up. How else could the country be racing towards a train-wreck - without any apparent revolution and against the will of its people - if the political system itself were not at fault.

The Nationalism of National Action

We want Australia to be independent, to be governed by a Head of State elected by its people and with authority to act. We want the real social groupings of the family, the workplace and local area to be re-empowered and given direct representation at every level, without the intermediary of political parties. We want Australia's European and Christian identity to be respected and preserved. The Nationalist movement within Australia must be placed within the context of revival of the Traditional West, a family of European Christian nations. The economic system must not just be tinkered with by "adding" a little protectionism, but should be set upon an entirely different footing.

We believe it is incoherent to attempt to use the banner of our political system to represent the ideals just listed. It has never stood for these things and was never meant to. Many Australian youths do not know this yet. Confusion about ideals and symbols is not clever. It is the same absence of Nationalism which saw the One Nation party off. National Action will continue to lead and be ahead of public opinion instead of following it.

Australian Resurgence

This paper is available upon subscription, free of charge. Edited by Michael Brander, it places the Nationalist struggle in Australia within its wider context of a resurgence of European tradition. This European civilisation is the Christian one which is now endangered by secularism of all kinds from within, and the immigration of peoples who reject it.

This broader context is the only way to understand the problems of nationality affecting all peoples of the West today. Much of the nationalist activity of the past has concentrated on merely reacting to some negative policies of secular liberal Western regimes without any real alternative social model to offer (apart from liberalism minus immigration, for example). This is not enough to build a successful alternative on. It is not enough to react to liberalism by using the ideas of liberalism.

Only the Christian tradition common to the whole of Europe prior to liberalism and secularism can answer it. False alternatives like socialism, radical Islam etc. are not the answer and can never work. This wider struggle is the focus of Australian Resurgence.

We are sad to have to report the death of longtime National Action supporter, Jos Underhill. A founding member of National Action in Adelaide, he was a stalwart supporter of the party all along. His funeral was well-attended by patriots. Jos will be missed. He was always there as long as his physical health permitted. His presence was always an encouragement to younger members of Australian National Action

(From a notice which appeared in the Adelaide Advertiser on 7/10/05)

Naturally the propaganda engines of our political system made efforts to twist the significance of what people were angry about at Cronulla. It was said by some branches of the media to be an outpouring of Anglo hate towards all migrants. This is false. It ignores the presence of Australian youths of varied European origin at Cronulla, as well as the fact that their problems were almost uniquely with groups of Muslim origin. It fails to note that some of the worst violence has been directed by Muslim groups against Lebanese Christians who do not want a bar of any of this.

Where are the "anti-terror" police when they are needed?

The firing of twenty rounds into a Lebanese Maronite Church while five year-old children were singing Christmas carols has not been declared a terrorist crime. Why not? Could it be that "anti-terror" laws and political police are there to protect the domestic and foreign political agenda of the Government? It's clear that they are.

The establishment knows very well that hatred between so-called Anglo-Australians and all other immigrants is one that nobody can ever win from. Such a dispute is not patriotism or nationalism, it is the purest form of multiculturalism. But if angry Australians could be fooled into going down that path they would truly be the kind of people that Steyn laughs at. In the meantime, the Asianisation of Australia continues at an ever-faster pace.

The future

Does this mean nothing can be done? No. It demonstrates the reserve of anger over many government policies. These gatherings, like the rise of One Nation, are always encouraging, but they demonstrate the need for Nationalist leadership. National Action stands alone. The presence of a sympathetic crowd provided a temporary comfort zone for conservative and neo-Nazi groups, but the lack of any direction shows what the lack of Nationalist leadership can lead to.

Youngsters are imprisoned for carrying tree branches on the other side of Sydney from Cronulla while ethnic gangs are free to smash whole streets and their occupants. So far only 3 Middle Eastern gang members have been charged over their anti-Australian rampage lasting several days, while 27 Europeans have been charged over a couple of punch-ups in which, however inexcusable, nothing was seriously hurt except the illusion of three decades of multicultural propaganda. So far most of these people have remained imprisoned.

Not the time for populism

That is best left to the leader of the NSW opposition who, along with talk-show hosts will steal the ground from any well-meaning patriots who sound-off with similar messages. Nationalists refuse to blend in with Howard's crowd for whom the real transgression of the Lebanese is not that they reject our European tradition, but that they aren't playing the game, like "successful" ethnic Chinese.

Study pushes higher migrant intake

John Howard's Government is now the biggest promoter of Third World Immigration in Australia's history. This has been noticed by political commentators. Even Rupert Murdoch's Paul Kelly, writing for The Australian, has repeated the opinion of National Action News (published some years ago) that Howard's high profile detention of a few hundred illegal boat people had allowed him to run the biggest program of immigration ever.

The pro-immigration catch-cry is now the need for "skilled" migrants. The Australian Productivity Commission has worked out that a 50% increase in skilled immigration over the next 20 years would have a small effect on our standard of living but that it is "workable" (The Australian 17/1/06). It does not look like a compelling argument to continue to change Australia's ethnic make-up and make worse the problems of ethnic rivalry experienced over the world.

The real reason is the lack of cheap workers. The hype about joining the rest of the world really means becoming a Third World economy where cheap resources are exploited by cheap labour for the benefit of the few. If all the world could be transformed into a transient workforce at the beck and call of transnationals, the globalists would have achieved their goal. All that stands in the way is our refusal to be slaves to materialism.

Continuing campaign against Teasdale.

The campaign goes on. In November the Adelaide suburb Aberfoyle Park was letterboxed. The area was posterized several times. Just in case the Education Department decided it was time for a rest, the holiday period has also been used to distribute material publicising what political correctness dictatorship has led to in the case of Principal Wendy Teasdale.

Readers will be aware that our campaign has gone on for two and a half years, during which time we have raised public awareness of an Asian gang problem at Parafield Gardens -from which school we succeeded in getting her sacked. She insisted on calling her unannounced departure from the school a "promotion" despite having insisted that wild horses would never make her yield to the National Action campaign to remove her.

Widespread media coverage for National Action campaign

National Action began its campaign some time before this in order to draw attention to the festering problem of gangs, whose attacks on European Australian students were being ignored by teachers from the principal down. When a youth was savagely attacked with a machete by a mob of scores inside the school National Action intervened by holding a well-publicised demonstration at the front gate. Once again, leaflets and posters were employed.

Teasdale lied about the attack and got the local paper to publish the home address of the victim (!). National Action's "Liar, Liar, Liar" poster campaign ensured she was removed within weeks. To soften the blow, she has been given a $30,000 prize for Australia's best principal! Our current campaign is based upon the slogan "Give Back the Prize, Teasdale". It will go on.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Will Unions sell-out wages and conditions?

Once again, the big workers unions, which were both able and morally obliged to stop the inflow of cheap guest workers, are considering selling-out the hard-won gains of unions in the past.

The Australian Workers Union and the Australian Manufacturing Workers Union are discussing a proposal by international labour-contracting company Brunel, to have 400 S.E. Asian workers brought here to work for half the pay of their Australian counterparts. The bribe for the unions is that the "other half" of the salary would go into a trust fund controlled by the union, supposedly for the training of Australian workers. The hiring of the guest workers would then translate into $20 million for the unions (The Australian 20/1/06).

The pretext is that the positions cannot be filled by Australians. But it is the principle of fair pay for the same work that the internationalists hope to get the unions to capitulate on. The signs are they may not have to try hard.

The last 20 years have seen union capitulation on matters of principle again and again. The issues of preventing the importation of cheap labour and maintaining Australian wages and conditions are vital ones for any labour movement in this country. Yet the Unions seem happy to wreck all that has been achieved for a few short-term sweeteners for their organisations. The strategy of treating unions as a privileged club for a declining and ageing membership is not just wrong; it is a recipe for complete marginalisation in the end.

Destabilisation of National Civic Council continues

As we predicted in the September issue of National Action News, the NCC is firmly within the sights of economic rationalists. The Australian newspaper could hardly contain its delight at being able to report that there is a power struggle going on between the Head Office and State branches of the NCC. It continues to misrepresent the feud as being one between La Rouchites (at the Federal level) and "goodies" at State level. As we reported, this is just a screen. The trouble has centred more around the push by some sections to "modernise" the ideas of the NCC in line with "scientific" economics that is to say, economic rationalism and neo-conservatism.

The irony is that those who are trying to preserve B.A. Santamaria's legacy (of anti-economic rationalism) are being depicted as moving the organisation towards La Rouchist ideas. In fact, it is those who (from within and outside the NCC) ridiculed Santamaria's proposals for economic decentralisation, rural resettlement, and national control of the economy who are deserting his ideals.

More jobs go in SA

Another 250 jobs are to go at Adelaide's Mitsubishi plant. This comes after a thousand jobs were axed last year, and an even greater number were seen off at the GMH plant in northern Adelaide. The Mitsubishi workforce in the city will now be exactly half what it was in 2003.

All this is a direct result of economic rationalism. This free-trade, open borders, globalist policy is now the religion of both major parties. This explains why the Liberal Party, in opposition in the State, is unable to make any headway against the Labor Government which should be falling apart as the decline of South Australia becomes ever more obvious. Instead the Government pats itself on the back.

The economic rationalists in South Australia, like those everywhere, gamble away on the "marketplace" people's livelihoods and futures. The hope in SA is that a minerals boom will come to the rescue and compensate for the manufacturing jobs that are disappearing in droves. The fact is that resources will be extracted by foreign companies paying low tax. The mines will be largely worked by foreign guest workers who, if they don't stay here (and all Australians are really looking forward to that!), will send most of their money home. Even more importantly, such an economic transformation displaces Australians and turns us into a Bolivian-style resources banana monarchy.
